Col. Lindbergh Arrives As Hauptmann's Cache Yields Link to 'Jafsie'

'Jafsie's' PhoneNumber, Serial Figures on Sliding Boards.

Case Is Clinched, Says Prosecutor

By Francis A. Jamieson.
(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Flying in from the West, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh were back tonight to aid the revived investigation into the murder and kidnaping of their first child as authorities announced discovery of important new evidence against Bruno Richard Hauptmann, accused recipient of the ransom.

Coincident with the arrival of the Lindberghs from the Pacific Coast, Gov. A. Harry Moore, of New Jersey, declared his State stood ready to try the suspect on charges of kidnaping and murder.

The flying couple landed at Trenton only a few hours after police had found, jotted down on a hidden closet panel in Hauptmann's Bronx home, the private telephone number and address of Dr. John F. Condon. Dr. Condon was the "Jafsie" who as intermediary paid the $50,000 ransom for the child, then thought to be alive.

Find Serial Numbers.

On another board in the same closet investigators found a series of figures which they said might be serial numbers of the ransom money.

District Attorney Samuel J. Foley, submitting the two panels to the grand jury, declared the prisoner had admitted authorship of the memoranda. He gave as his reason for making the pencilled notations, Foley said, an "interest" in the Lindbergh kidnaping.

"Where did you get that telephone number?" the prosecutor said he asked Hauptmann.

"From the newspapers," he quoted the stolid suspect as replying.

Foley said he told Hauptmann that Dr. Condon's number never was published, and that in any event it had been changed two days before the ransom negotiations began. Hauptmann remained silent, he said.

New Witnesses Quizzed.

The prosecutor said Hauptmann told him he wrote the other figures in March, 1932, and that they were "some numbers on the bills I got from Isador Fisch."

Hauptmann has contended the $13,750 found secreted in his garage had been entrusted to him by Fisch, who subsequently died in Germany.

Shortly after Gov. Moore's announcement that Hauptmann's ex-

Five Balloons Vanish in Race

Unreported Craft Feared Down in Wastes of Russia.

Moscow, Sept. 25 (AP).—Five balloons participating in the twenty-second annual Gordon Bennett Cup Race that started at Warsaw, Poland, Sunday still had not been reported tonight.

Aviation circles expressed the opinion that some of them, swept along by northwesterly winds, might have been carried into the Karelia area north of Leningrad.

A region of vast forests and thousands of lakes, Karelia might hold the balloonists for weeks before they could get news of their landing to the outside world.

Seven of the 16 competing balloons landed on Russian soil, two came down in Esthonia, another was grounded in Lithuania, while the eleventh landed 300 kilometers northeast of Helsingfors, Finland, on Finnish territory.

The United States Navy entry landed near Leningrad on the Russian side of the Esthonian border, some 650 miles from Warsaw.

Iowa War Veteran, 85, Wins Murder Retrial

Des Moines, Sept. 25 (AP).—The State Supreme Court today reversed and remanded for new trial the case of Marvin T. Grattan, 85-year-old Decorah Civil War veteran, now under life sentence for murder.

Grattan, a former racing news expert, was convicted of slaying Claude Means, a horse trainer, following an argument at the Decorah Fair Grounds in July, 1933.

Reserve Board Guards Trade In Securities

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Precautions against upsetting in any way security trading are being taken by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission in the drafting of rules to carry out the provisions of the stock market control act which become effective Monday, it was asserted at these agencies yesterday.

This was the explanation given for the delay in the promulgation of regulations regarding marginal trading, manipulative and deceptive practices, segregation of the functions of exchange members, brokers and dealers; filing of periodical reports by issuers; the use of proxies; over-the-counter trading and similar provisions of the law effective October 1.

Interest in financial circles centered chiefly on the Federal Reserve Board rules to govern marginal trading. The board has completed the job of drafting these regulations, except for several minor points still in dispute. As soon as these questions are settled the rules will be simultaneously made public here and by each of the 12 Federal Reserve banks.

Reserve Men Study Rules.

The regulations are now in the hands of officers of reserve banks. This was a last-minute precaution, it was said, taken for the purpose of making certain that the proposed rules are practical by getting the views of those in closest touch with the security and credit markets.

Although the rules agreed on are being kept secret, the feeling was general here yesterday that the Reserve Board in its initial requirements for margins would adopt the standard set up by Congress in the

3 Fires Began At Once, Says Liner Witness

Morro Watchman Blames Bomb; Asserts He Smelled Chemicals.

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Morro Castle was destroyed by three separate fires beginning almost simultaneously, Arthur J. Pender, night watchman on duty when the flames were discovered, told the Department of Commerce Investigation Board today.

He was convinced the flames he saw first came from burning chemicals, Pender said. He smelled odors like benzine or naphtha and burning rags.

"Loud Explosion."

He told of an explosion, "loud and "intense," which followed shortly after the heat from the blazing lounge had driven him and other firefighters to another deck.

"In the light of everything that happened," he stated, "I think that the ship was bombed."

Capt. Willmott, he said, had instructed him to watch the radio man closely.

"Do you mean to say the captain was terrified of a radio operator?" inquired Dickerson N. Hoover, chairman of the board of inquiry.

Called Captain Crank.

"Yes," replied Pender, "but personally, I always found Alagna a fine follow."

He asserted that during the watch he kept on Alagna, the only thing he ever heard the radio man say of

U. S. Agent Shot From Ambush While Raiding Maryland Still

Cyrus Thomas, Internal Revenue agent shot in the abdomen and peppered with buckshot by moonshiners yesterday at 5 p. m., while raiding a still near Forestville, Md., was reported in "fair" condition late last night at the Providence Hospital.

While operations of the Internal Revenue Department were cloaked in secrecy, it was learned that one of the largest man-hunts in years had been organized to apprehend the still-operators who shot Thomas from ambush.

Thomas, with L. J. Nay, another agent, had located and raided a 350-gallon still in a lonely thickly-wooded swamp one-half mile northeast of the Marlboro pike, and one mile from Forestville. Thomas and Nay arrested two colored men, helpers at the still who were loading whisky into a car north of the swamp. While Thomas handcuffed his man to a tree, Nay pursued the other man toward the swamp.

Nay heard three pistol shots and a shotgun report, and found Thomas lying on the ground, bleeding from gunshot wounds, and a wound in the abdomen. Thomas said he was shot from ambush. The other colored man, after aiding Nay to take Thomas to the car, also escaped.

The raid, one of the largest local seizures since the repeal of prohibition, had captured 2,000 gallons of mash, the 350-gallon still and 60 gallons of whisky which were being loaded into the car.

The man-hunt, headed by W. A. Heddens, acting assistant superintendent of enforcement of the Internal Revenue Department, imported squads of agents from both Baltimore and Washington to the scene, where fingerprints were taken, and the territory combed for traces of the assailants. The Washington squad under L. G. Mitchell was at the swamp yesterday and last night.

Protest Off, Cup Retained By Rainbow

Challenge on Victory Is Later Withdrawn by British Skipper.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 25 (AP).—Britain's newest and perhaps most gallant bid for the famed America's Cup ended drably tonight far from the open seas where T. O. M. Sopwith's challenger Endeavour and the snow-white defender Rainbow fought through six races.

Sopwith, so bitter he said he never again would challenge for the battered old mug, withdrew his protest of Rainbow's 55-second victory today—fourth straight after the Endeavour had won two races.

His withdrawal of the second charge of foul he has made in the series automatically removed the necessity for hearings the race committee had ordered tonight after Harold S. Vanderbilt broke out the red flag of protest and Sopwith followed suit a few minutes later at today's starting line. Since Vanderbilt won the race anyway, there would scarcely be any sense to awarding it to him a second time on a foul, even if he could prove his case.

Challenger Is Bitter.

There was no questioning Sopwith's bitterness as he explained his withdrawal of the protest tonight.

"I protested for the same reason I did Saturday," he said, "on the grounds that Vanderbilt refused to give way before the start when I had the right of way under the rules.

"But having won the start, and having lost the race fairly, I decided not to go ahead with my protest. Furthermore, I definitely will not challenge for the cup again."

Vanderbilt had nothing to say, and since he was not called upon to file a written protest, his grounds for a foul claim were not known.

Sopwith had his opinion of this, however.

"He knew I had grounds for a protest," he said, "and so he anticipated my flag and got his up first."

Sopwith said Endeavour would start back to England in about a week, sailing part of the way under her own canvas if the weather permitted, in tow of his yacht Vita if it didn't. He expects to sail for home with Mrs. Sopwith, a member of his afterguard, from New York as soon as possible.

Charles Nicholson, designer of the challenger, left for New York immediately, giving off quotations that would set fire to newsprint.

Made Great Showing.

The Englishman's showing, in the opinion of the experts, was the greatest ever made by any challenger. She outsailed Rainbow completely in the first two official matches. Sail bungling cost her a third victory today.

Sopwith was coldly noncommittal regarding the New York Yacht Club, the race committee, and the rival skipper. He said, however,

Debt Holiday Is Upheld In Iowa Supreme Court

Des Moines, Sept. 25 (AP).—The constitutionality of the State emergency law providing for continuance until March 1, 1935, in mortgage foreclosures was upheld today by the Iowa Supreme Court.

The decision was returned in the case of Coy Craig against Ira E. Waggoner, appellant. The case was brought to foreclosure in the Warren County District Court.

Roper Reply To Business Scouts Fear

Most Recovery Steps Are Only Temporary, Says Secretary.

Initiative of Industry to Be Safeguarded, Leaders Told.

Cincinnati, Sept. 25 (AP).—Directly seeking to reassure business spokesmen who had manifested "apprehension," Secretary Roper tonight asserted the New Deal would safeguard individual initiative and there need be no fear that all or most emergency recovery steps "may become permanent."

In what was generally interpreted as a reply to the request by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States that the Administration clarify its position, Roper declared there was no thought of bringing about "complete abolition of 'the old order' of our economic and social system."

Addressing the convention here of the National Exchange Club, he said:

"Many steps must be taken during an emergency which become unnecessary when equilibrium is fully reestablished.

Indicates Future Policy.

"The fact that some reforms may be initiated along with emergency acts gives no grounds whatever for concluding that all or even a major part of the emergency acts may become permanent.

"Constructive administrative experience and future developments will indicate what features should be made permanent and which are to be utilized only until the emergency has passed."

Roper only a month ago broadcast to the Nation's business leaders, after consulting with President Roosevelt, a message that the New Deal was whole-heartedly for preservation of the "profit motive." He did not specify tonight what Administration policies would be changed or how.

Obviously, Mr. Roper's generalized statements were considered significant by Roosevelt followers. It was emphasized that the Secretary had given weeks to preparation of his address. It was assumed, too, that Mr. Roosevelt knew of its content.

Wants Initiative Aided.

"Let us make every effort," Roper said, "to safeguard local and individual initiative by weaning dependent agencies as soon as possible from the nursing bottle of Federal aid after the emergencies that bring the National Government into cooperative relief endeavors have passed.

"One of the vital needs of this year is, therefore, to wean depen-

Retail Food Cost Again Increases

Prices at Highest Point Since October, 1931.

Retail food prices were reported yesterday by the Labor Department to have advanced 1.3 per cent during the two weeks ended September 11, placing them at the highest point since October, 1931, the Associated Press reported.

The current index of prices was given as 116.8, compared with 115.3 for the two weeks previous, 111.8 a month ago and 107.0 a year ago.

"The accumulated rise in retail food prices," the department said, "has amounted to 29.2 per cent since the low point, April 15, 1933."

Of the 42 articles of food upon which the index is based, 23 increased in price, 8 declined and 11 remained unchanged.

Percy Rockefeller, 56, Dies After Operation

Nephew of John D. Kept out of the Limelight; Told Senate Inquiry of Big Losses in Market Slump After Boom.

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Percy Avery Rockefeller, 56, nephew of John D. Rockefeller and a capitalist of first magnitude in his own right, died today.

He had been critically ill since Saturday, when he underwent an operation in Doctors' Hospital for a stomach ailment which had given him trouble the last two years.

Mr. Rockefeller was born in New York February 27, 1878, some time after his parents, William and Almira Goodsell Rockefeller, had left Cleveland.

In this trek eastward the William Rockefellers were only a part of that famous Standard Oil group headed by John D., William's brother.

After his graduation from Yale in 1900, Percy Rockefeller, with his brother, William G., took up the management of his father's interests, when the elder Rockefeller died.

Percy Rockefeller's activities in Wall street stamped him as a shrewd and versatile financier. He was retiring and shunned the limelight. He reputedly accepted places on the boards of a score of leading corporations because the managements wanted his judgment.

In the memoirs of the late C. W. Barron, publisher of the Wall Street Journal, it was related that the "Percy Rockefeller crowd profited to the extent of $65,000,000 in the stock market crisis of 1921," and another report said that the "crowd" during the war years amassed $200,000,000.

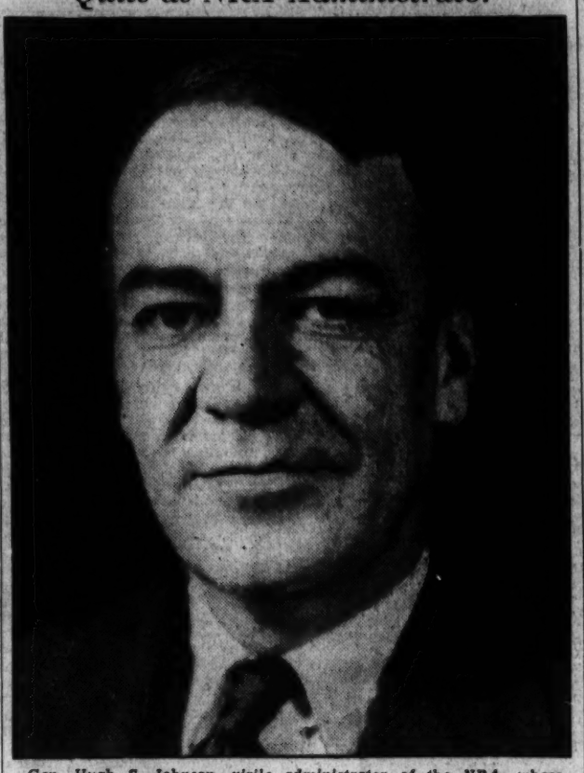
Rockefeller testified before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in 1932 that he had lost heavily in the slump in market values and had profited only $550,000 in operations on the bear side.

One of Rockefeller's less fortunate corporate connections was the International Match Corporation, of which he was a director. He became involved with other directors in litigation growing out of the Kreuger fiasco.

Rockefeller married Isabel Stillman in 1901. Besides her he is survived by five children, Avery, Faith and Gladys Rockefeller, Mrs. Frederick W. Lincoln, jr., and Mrs. Brooks Emeny.

Gen. Johnson Resigns; Calls Job 'Superfluous' Under Reorganization

Quits as NRA Administrator



Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, virile administrator of the NRA, whose resignation was tendered to President Roosevelt yesterday and immediately accepted.

Due Back Today From Hyde Park

By Leon Dure, Jr.
(Post Staff Writer).

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 25.—President Roosevelt tonight announced his acceptance of the resignation of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, fiery administrator of NRA, effective October 15.

An exchange of letters, made public by the Summer White House, disclosed the end of the stormy flight of the Blue Eagle under its temperamental creator and unquestioned dictator.

The Recovery Administration, however, will pass under control of a policy board under a plan the full details of which have not yet been completed.

Gen. Johnson, writing from New York yesterday, urged that he be released "from a job which, as reorganized, seems altogether superfluous."

President Roosevelt, in reply, addressed the General as "Dear Hughie" and paid high tribute to his "courage, enthusiasm and energy." Thereby closed the most colorful chapter in the brief history of the New Deal.

The retiring recovery chief's administrative assistant and occasional substitute, Miss Frances Robinson, also is expected to resign.

Text of Resignation.

Gen. Johnson's letter of resignation read as follows:

"New York City, Sept. 24, 1934.

"Dear Mr. President:

"The reorganization of NRA, which has been the subject of so many conferences and memoranda between us, is becoming momentarily more urgent. We are in agreement upon the general form of reorganization and I do hope you will now also see eye-to-eye with me on the subject of my resigning from a job which as reorganized seems altogether superfluous. Added to this are private considerations which are becoming more and more poignant. I therefore urge again your acceptance of my resignation.

"Our cordial and warm relations over so long a time make it unnecessary to say that you will con-

Capital Lawyer Ordered Jailed

Chief Justice Wheat Rules Norman B. Landreau in Contempt of Court.

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, of the District Supreme Court, yesterday ordered Norman B. Landreau, an attorney, arrested and confined in the District Jail for an indeterminate sentence for contempt of court.

Landreau, according to the complaint against him, failed to obey an order of the court which called upon him to produce in court the papers and records of his management of the estate of Vincent L. McCarty, an insane World War veteran.

Justice Jennings Bailey issued a contempt order against him several weeks ago, but the order was vacated when friends of Landreau informed him that, if given additional time, the attorney could produce the records pertaining to McCarty's estate.

Landreau was given until yesterday to give up the papers and when he failed to appear, Chief Justice Wheat ordered the United States marshal to arrest him and have him kept in the District Jail until such time as he purges himself of contempt by turning in the data he has in his possession.

Although a corps of marshals sought Landreau, his arrest had not been effected late yesterday. He has a law office in the Barr Building.

Powers' Talks On Navy Ratio Begin Oct. 20

London Conversations May Take Place of '35 Conference.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Naval disarmament conversations among Great Britain, Japan and the United States, upon which depend the fate of the 1935 naval parley and the balance of sea power, are expected to open in London about October 20, it was learned last night.

Japanese and American delegations of naval experts are due to reach London shortly before October 20, it was said in informed quarters. The conversations presumably will start at once.

United States Ambassador at Large Norman W. Davis, the Nation's outstanding disarmament spokesman, is to arrive here before the end of the week for final consultation with President Roosevelt, State and Navy Department officials.

Bingham to Assist.

He expects to sail for London either October 3 or 10, probably the latter date. Five or six political and naval arms experts will join him in London, some going from here, others being lent by the London or nearby embassies. Ambassador Robert W. Bingham at London will collaborate with Davis.

A Japanese delegation headed by Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto will pass through the United States the week of October 4 en route to London. It will sail from New York,

Brann, Tunney Asked to Join New Deal Cast

Governor, Former Pugilist Invited to Describe 'How Maine Went.'

By Robert C. Albright.

Gov. Louis Brann of Maine and his campaign whooper-up, Gene Tunney, have been invited by the Democratic Congressional speakers' bureau to enter the lists for the New Deal up and down the Eastern seaboard.

The Democratic speakers' bureau, which is a little short of money at present, but long on ideas, wants the team of Brann and Tunney to tell New York, New Jersey and even Pennsylvania, "how Maine went."

Casting far and wide for campaign talent to throw into the party's oratorical finals, invitations will go to several high departmental officials, and to such Democratic regulars as Joseph P. Tumulty and Huston Thompson.

Embarrassing to the bureau at present is an acute shortage of funds with which to pay the expenses of such of these gentlemen as accept, but leaders are banking heavily on the war chests of local campaign committees, and the private pocketbooks of the speakers themselves.

Gov. Brann, his sartorial splendor adding elegance to his campaign chatter, would look good on any political platform, argue members of the Democratic Senatorial and Congressional campaign committees.

Besides, they want the man who ran ahead of his ticket in Maine to tell how he did it in other Eastern States, in need just now of last-minute words of Democratic wisdom.

As for Gene Tunney, former heavyweight champion, who di-

City Prepares to Mobilize As Starling Army Returns

In chattering thousands Washington's notorious starlings returned to the downtown areas at twilight yesterday, after an absence of almost six months.

As dusk fell they flew to the trees along Pennsylvania avenue, and with a swift whirring of wings took up their rendezvous on the leafy boughs with the apparent attitude of wanderers home once more. Crowds thronging the streets heard their familiar rustle and bustle in the limbs above them, and knew the District was in for its annual starling war.

Clifford Lanham, superintendent of District trees, will be the general in charge of the anti-starling drive again this year.

Already he has ordered 100 toy balloons, from 8 to 10 inches in diameter, to use in fighting the pests. He will hire as many Emergency Relief workers as possible, and rely on the balloon method to keep the starlings from congesting on public thoroughfares as long as it is effective.

"There's nothing in the world frightens the starlings so much as the balloons," Mr. Lanham explained yesterday.

Armed with a balloon, attached to a stout string, one of the special starling discouragers walks along until he discovers a flock of starlings congregated in a tree or ledge. He looses the balloon holding tight to the string.

The balloon bobs into the midst of the starlings, and the birds, terror-stricken, vanish.

All day the starlings, which soar north in the summer, forage for food, and at dusk they return to the city and begin their nocturnal activities.

Last year, definitely discouraged by Mr. Lanham's workers in the downtown district, they fled to the Capitol, where they resisted all efforts to evict them. Even blank cartridges failed, and only the rustle of spring sent them away to happier hunting grounds.

Reserve Board Guards Trade In Securities

Determination of the figure, however, would be the least difficult part of the Reserve Board task. The stock market control act directed this board to prescribe provisions for the carrying of under-margined accounts for limited periods; special or different margin rates for delayed deliveries, short sales and arbitrage transactions; the bases and methods of calculating loans, margins and market prices and similar administrative adjustments and detail.

The board also was authorized, if it deemed such action necessary, to prescribe lower marginal requirements for specified securities or transactions or clasess of securities.

Binding on Outside Banks.

The rules of the board will be binding not only on members of stock exchanges and brokers, but also on banks outside of the Reserve System as well as those affiliated. Marginal accounts in existence prior to June 6, the date of the enactment of the legislation, will not be affected by the rules until July 1, 1937.

Despite this provision in the law, brokers have been reducing their loans, according to reports given out by the Federal Reserve Board. For the week which ended last Wednesday, brokers' loans totaled $745,000,000, a drop of $51,000,000 in a week and $80,000,000 less than on the corresponding day of last year. The $745,000,000 figure was the lowest for brokers' loans this year, compared with a high of $1,069,000,000 reached in the week ended July 3.

Only marginal requirements and provisions regarding the extension of credit to brokers come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board. Incidentally, this will mark the first time that the Reserve System authorities have had an adequate control over the flow of credit going into the stock market.

"Rule of Reason" Is Aim.

Drafting of rules regarding pegging, fixing or stabilizing the price of securities; short selling and manipulative or deceptive devices is in the hands of the Securities and Exchange Commission as well as regulations to govern the gathering of proxies, the submission of periodical reports by issuers; the functions of brokers and dealers and similar aspects of the law.

The commission has moved slowly in framing regulations in an effort to guard against any hasty, ill-advised action, it was explained by attaches of the agency. The guiding principle has been to achieve a "rule of reason," it was explained.

It is not yet known what rules the commission will be in a position to promulgate before the effective date next Monday. It is possible that some basic rules forbidding or restricting practices regarded generally as evil will be issued this week. From time to time these rules will be supplemented and built up as loopholes in them are discovered or experience demonstrates them to be inadequate.

With security trading at its present stagnant levels, it is understood the commission feels there is not much to regulate and that little harm can come from moving cautiously in laying down restrictions.

Lazard Freres Opens.

The most encouraging item of news received in many days in financial circles here was the announcement that Lazard Freres & Co., Inc., has opened as a security and underwriting house in the Wall Street community. Wall Street long has been the gloomiest place in the country—and with some reason, as dull trading forced retrenchments by security and brokerage houses.

The Lazard Freres announcement, however, was regarded as particularly significanct as indicating the faith of those backing the venture that there is a profit to be made in the capital issue market and that the onerous regulations of the 1933 securities act will be modified.

The chairman of the directors of the new enterprise is Frank Altschul, who also is chairman of the listing committee of the New York Stock Exchange. In that post Mr. Altschul is thoroughly familiar with the 1933 securities act and has kept closely in touch with every development regarding that legislation.

Milk Monopoly Is Laid to AAA

Supplementary Complaint to Suit Filed by Maryland Dairy.

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Royal Farms Dairy today filed informally in the United States District Court a supplementary complaint to its suit against Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, charging they were assisting in the establishment of "a complete monopoly in the Baltimore milk market."

Judge W. Calvin Chesnut, before whom the original suit is pending, ruled that the supplementary complaint automatically would become a part of the record unless the defendants showed cause before Thursday why it should not be allowed.

It was Judge Chesnut who last week declared the five-year clause of the farm mortgage moratorium act, another New Deal measure, is unconstitutional.

In the original complaint the dairy sought to restrain the AAA from examining its books. It contended it conducted only an intrastate business and that the Federal Government had no right under the Constitution to interfere.

In the supplementary complaint the dairy asked the court to enjoin Wallace and his agents from an effort to persuade milk producers not to ship to it, and from spreading the belief among farmers that it was operating illegally.

Johnson Resignation Ends One-Man Rule

Departure of Most Colorful Figure on National Scene Marks Beginning of New Phase in Permanent Shaping of NRA Policy.

By Elliott Thurston.

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson's long predicted resignation as administrator of the NRA marks the end of one-man control, the beginning of a new phase in the permanent shaping of NRA policy and procedure.

Ever since the General took office, on June 16, 1933, he has been the most colorful figure on the National scene. His torrid oratory, his long succession of battles, with Henry Ford, with the press, with Senators Borah and Nye, with Clarence Darrow, with organized labor, even with his erstwhile NRA teammate, Donald Richberg, and with Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, kept him constantly in the headlines.

He had "tentatively" planned to quit at the end of last year. He had offered to step out before and had previously submitted at least one written resignation. Until he broke finally with organized labor by charging in his recent New York speech that the United Textile Workers had broken faith by striking, the President had held on to him. But this was the end of his usefulness to the Administrtaion as the Stalin in command of the "industrial OGPU," as its critics had called NRA.

President Now Has Free Hand.

His unspectacular going—he is in retreat somewhere in or near New York—leaves the President a free hand to effect at once the planned reorganization of NRA under two boards or councils, one to be composed of prominent industrial and business leaders who will be responsible for policy, another to be the administrative arm.

The field also is left to Richberg and Miss Perkins, who have been supplanting Johnson as the President's advisers in whipping NRA into the shape in which the Administration will ask the incoming Congress to perpetuate it.

In conferences with Bernard M. Baruch, Johnson's former employer and sponsor, with Gerald Swope, of General Electric, and Prof. Raymond Moley and others, Mr. Roosevelt has been seeking a new personnel to be at the top of NRA.

That the fire-eating general's day was ending has long been evident. His friends regarded him primarily as the dynamic organizer, the supersalesman, who had "put over" the NRA as brilliantly as he had organized the selective draft of war days. They felt, and he recognized, that he was not of the temperament to be the permanent administrator of the vast organization, and its staggering web of codes evolved during his regime.

Came to Grips With Labor.

While his year and three months in office had been marked by continual fire and smoke, he had finally come to grips with organized labor in what might have proved too desperate a battle for the Administration to take on at this juncture. The outraged textile unionists already had demanded his scalp. The American Federation of Labor, scheduled to meet in annual convention next week in San Francisco, planned to demand his immediate removal.

So much did Johnson personify and dominate NRA that in his absences, particularly of late, the whole organization seemed to be at a standstill, its thousands of subordinates like a leaderless army. The guess inside NRA is that Miss Frances Robinson, the general's assistant who had become as much of an alter ego as so dominant a man could have, will exit with him.

Washington, especially the press, warmed to the general even when doubting the wisdom of much of his "cracking down." His intensity, loyalty, patriotism, his gruelling overwork, regardless of his health, which several times threatened to break, his monumental achievement in selling NRA to the entire Nation, and in the breath-taking multiplication of some 500 codes, made him one of the most extraordinary figures in public life—outshining even Al Smith as a front-page headliner.

His gift for lusty epithets added to his vividness. The word "chiseler" and numerous other taunts which he flung at his critics—Neanderthal men, Bourbons, Tories, Corporals of Disaster, they were to him—marked him as a word-coiner and phrase-maker of the T. R. stamp.

Source of Uneasiness.

However, the General's sulphurous trail has been a constant cause of Administration uneasiness and a subject of unending discussion, largely to the effect that bludgeoning methods were making too many enemies. A glance back at the fat clipping envelopes, stuffed with the record of the General's furious combats, is proof enough of his pugnacity. How he survived the ordeal through which he put himself, often working all day and most of the night, has been a source of constant wonder. But the General had packed much into his life before he became the inventor and custodian of the Blue Eagle. Now 52, he had been soldier, lawyer, manufacturer, author, poet.

Graduating from West Point in 1903, he was nicknamed "Toughie" when he was a shavetail. At 37 he was a brigadier general, the youngest since the Civil War. He had been on duty after the San Francisco earthquake, served in the Philippines, finished a law course, acted as judge advocate under Pershing in the pursuit of Villa in Mexico. Gen. Crowder gave him unstinted praise for developing the draft machinery—well ahead of authority from Congress. He got the D. S. M. for this service. He found time to write boys' books, "Williams of West Point," and "Williams on Service." He left the Army in 1917 to become a right-hand man for Baruch—and to help run the Moline Plow Co., along with another future New Dealer, George Peak.

Under the guidance of Baruch, when the New York financier headed the War Industries Board, Johnson gave no public display of the talents so often taught by disciplining Army mules. Not until he emerged on his own, on top of NRA, was his name coupled in print with such adjectives as "fiery," "belligerent," "pugnacious," etc.

Since the setup of NRA is to be drastically changed, no question arises now of trying to replace the general. However, the reorganization must be quickly accomplished, for a Johnsonless NRA is chaos under the existing order. Moreover, the Administration is eager to put the NRA in more lasting form, for approval of a Congress full of critics.

"It's Too Big For Me."

Johnson long singe agreed that NRA should be administered by a board, and was quoted some time ago as saying: "This is no longer a one-man job. It's too big for me to keep in touch with the details. Code administration is a job for a board or a commission." He added that he preferred not to serve on such a board—but such is his loyalty to the President that it commanded to serve he would obey like a soldier.

The revised NRA, divided into "executive, legislative and judicial" functions, is slated to turn over much of the important code enforcement work to the Department of Justice, and labor issues to the Department of Labor. Code simplification is one of the present aims—a master code for many industries. And presumably the contemplated policy board will finally determine how much industry is to govern itself, how much or how little Federal domination is to remain, and other vital question, including those relating to price-fixing and price-raising.

Even those whom he accused of throwing "dead cats" at his head concede that Johnson did a herculean job in short order, though they probably would not concede that NRA has produced the "25 per cent" recovery, the restoration of the millions of jobs, that Johnson claimed for it.

From the known bonds of friendship and loyalty between Mr. Roosevelt and the general, from the wording of the resignation letters, it is evident that the President may draw Johnson back into public service again.

Meanwhile Richberg, general counsel for NRA, whom the general had lately accused of disloyalty as Richberg's calmer counsels began to supersede his own, is the most influential figure in the New Deal picture in the reorganization program.

Whether Johnson will return to private business is not yet known. He left a high-salaried job to become the $6,000-a-year NRA administrator. That was boosted to $15,000 last July by the President.

the captain was "he's an old crank, and I'm going to stay on the boat just for meanness."

Alagna, in a lette. to Hoover, charged he was being made the scapegoat of the disaster. The charges, he said, were being based on the statements of a man now dead and that no evidence of his misconduct had been presented to the board.

Pender added still another mystery to the tale by telling of seeing a strange young man, not a member of the crew, who appeared terror stricken when encountered in the writing room a moment before a steward opened a locker "and released a burst of white flames."

Extension Urged For Sixteenth St.

Woodside Park Association Advocates Project.

A resolution urging immediate extension of Sixteenth street from its present terminus at the East-West highway to Brookeville pike has been adopted by the Woodside Park (Md.) Civic Association. Organizations which would be affected by this move are asked to support the resolution.

Weeds will be removed from the vacant lots in the park and new street signs erected in a clean-up campaign planned by the association.

Mrs. Phil D. Poston, chairman of the entertainment committee, announced that a meeting will be held Monday night to formulate plans for the social season.

An effort will be made to stop the speeding of automobile delivery trucks through the park, particularly on Dale drive.

Textile Union Plans Protest To Roosevelt

100,000 People Not Taken Back by Employers, Says Gorman.

A threat to protest to President Roosevelt that participants in the recent texile strike since have been discriminated against by mill owners was voiced yesterday by union leaders.

Francis J. Gorman, walkout chairman, announced his formal complaint would be submitted "within 24 hours unless the manufacturers quit defying the Administration and the findings of its board."

He reported his office was "swamped" with telegrams from field representatives charging employers were running plants with strike-breakers and refusing to hire unionists. He estimated that 100,000 of the approximately 450,000 strikers had not been taken back.

"The President," Gorman said, "asked the employers to take back strikers without discrimination, but apparently they aren't going to cooperate."

President Roosevelt probably will appoint shortly the three members of a textile labor relations board recommended by his strike mediators. In anticipation of that action the union has begun preparing for secret elections to pick collective bargaining representatives, due to be ordered by the new board.

The elections will show whether the union can prove its claims of more than a majority of members in every mill. The National Labor Relations Board has ruled, in a case yet to be tested in the courts, that employe majorities shall speak for all workers.

Brann and Tunney May Take Stump

rected his knock-out blows in Maine at the political opponents of Gov. Brann, Democratic committeemen believe he would be good "box office."

He packed the houses in Maine, his summer residence, and the speaker's bureau thinks he can do it elsewhere.

Tunney Adds Color.

True, according to some Maine reporters, he made an occasional "slip of the tongue," and encountered minor oratorical difficulties. But on the whole they say he added color to the preliminaries and a masculine touch to the final triumph.

Although Rudy Vallee also was billed by the Democrats in the Maine campaign free-for-all, there was no record last night that Rudy had been listed for a National campaign invitation.

E. J. MacMillan, white-haired, mild-mannered head of the speaker's buerau jointly set up by the Senatorial and Congressional Democratic committees, yesterday was busily compiling a list of acceptances, to be made public some time next week.

It was learned, however, that a number of Administration exponents of the New Deal, possibly officials high in the Treasury and Justice Departments, will be sent into the field in the last feverish days of the campaign.

In every case, consent of the department head will be sought, so that everything may be done "according to the rules." Committee executives say Secretary Morgenthau's ban on political affiliations of Treasury officials need not necessarily prove a barrier.

In most local campaigns, Senators not up for election have been requested to champion the cause of Democratic candidates with fights on their hands.

Additional Recruits.

But in such States as Indiana, Illinois and Michigan, in the Middle West, and New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, in the East, where the campaign war is a merry one, additional oratorical recriuts will be mustered.

The matter of expenses is causing some real concern at Democratic Congressional headquarters here. Few collections are received and the National Democratic committee, while promising aid, has lent little financial assistance to date.

"So it looks like hotel and traveling costs of the speakers will have to be borne by local committees," commented one official. "Maybe some of the speakers will pay their own way."

Between You and Me

Fletcher and Those G. O. P. 'Punches'—Ickes' Book and the New Deal Enemies.

By Raymond Clapper

Rising from the doldrums of a poverty-stricken campaign, Henry P. Fletcher, Republican National chairman, declares the party won't "pull its punches" in this campaign. In that case it will have to start talking about PWA, which thus far in the Republican campaign has been noticed chiefly by silence.

Not that the Republicans don't know PWA is vulnerable. Even Honest Harold Ickes himself won't defend some of the ways in which he has been compelled to spend the $3,300,000,000 public works chest. There are three raw instances of public works pork awaiting the day when Republicans can overcome their fears of offending local sentiment to advise the public as to what is going on.

• • • •

Number 1. Grand Coulee Dam, a gigantic job in the middle of the desert in Washington State, 75 miles from a big city, is being built over the opposition of Secretary Ickes and all responsible PWA officials. It is the glaring example of public works money being spent under local pressure. When finished, the dam will cost $63,000,000 and will be useless. No market exists for the power and the original height of the dam was cut down, leaving it too low to provide water for irrigation, assuming anybody wants to put 1,200,000 more acres under cultivation when the Agriculture Department is trying to buy up 40,000,000 acres and retire them.

Senator Clarence Dill, of Washington, induced President Roosevelt to override Ickes. After Mrs. Roosevelt took one look at the deep gashes which the excavators had cut for the foundations and the pitiful shanties scattered about the silent sagebrush wastelands, she remarked cryptically that Senator Dill certainly was a good salesman.

Number 2. In Montana, the Administration decided to go ahead with an $84,000,000 dam across the Missouri River to hold back and control flood waters. But the dam, in order to be located in Montana, where Senator Wheeler wanted it, had to go where it would fail to catch the flood waters of the Yellowstone River, which provides 57 per cent of the volume of the Missouri River. They locked up the barn but left the horse outside. Senator Wheeler won a great victory for Montana. But it doesn't have more than 63 per cent to do with holding back the muddy waters which raise havoc for hundreds of miles below.

Number 3. The Casper-Alcova project in Wyoming was approved to put more land under cultivation. It will have a carrying charge for the irrigation works which will make it hard for a one-eyed mule to scratch a living, unless the Government provides a subsidy.

These and similar instances would seem to be the natural ones to strike at when the Republican speakers are not pulling their punches. They would be except for one reason. Political pork is sacred to the voters who get it and Republicans, who have wanted to go at these matters with bare fists have been restrained by cautious ones who fear it might cost the party seats in Congress. Besides, there are things like the Bonneville Dam, near Portland, Oreg., which was sold to President Roosevelt by none other than Senator Charles L. McNary, the Republican leader of the Senate. He's tending his apple trees in Salem and isn't speaking at all in the campaign.

• • • •

That book which Secretary of Interior Ickes is writing will take the hide off of some of the prominent enemies of the New Deal. He is gunning for one critic who has been racing up and down the country declaring the Administration is stamping out constitutional liberty. Ickes will recite some past history in this connection. How did he find time to write a book while spending $3,000,000,000? He didn't. His ghost was Clark Foreman, nephew of Clark Howell, of Atlanta.

• • • •

Prof. Ray Moley would like to see the next Democratic National convention held in Dallas, Tex., in connection with the Texas centennial celebration. Several influential Texans would like to have it held there to make it a little more certain that the No. 1 Texas son, John N. Garner, will be renominated for Vice President. He was put on the ticket in 1932 as part of a trade by which his convention votes were swung to Mr. Roosevelt. But he is a New Dealer only by adoption. Others in the Administration want a former Republican—Wallace or Ickes—on the ticket to help hold the West and meet any potential challenge in the La Follette third party movement. Administration strategists favor doing anything to nip the third party, because it would split the shifting independent vote of the restless Midwest.

• • • •

The impression that the Administration favors Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, for the Speakership, arises from the fact that he and Prof. Moley went to Texas together. Gaunt Joe Byrns, majority leader, is still being played to win by those who bet on the form charts. A majority leader has never yet lost a fight for the Speakership.

Case May Decide Labor Unit Status

Petition for Ruling Filed in U. S. Circuit Court.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—Indication was given today that constitutionality of the National Labor Relations Board will be formally argued here some time within the next 90 days.

Claude M. Dean, clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, said that Judge John J. Parker has ordered filed the petition of the Ames Baldwin Wyoming Co., of Parkersburg, W. Va., attacking the constitutionality of the board and asking the court to review one of its decisions.

The West Virginia Corporation's petition was filed after the board had ordered it to cooperate within five days in the holding of an employe collective bargaining election, under penalty of prosecution by the NRA compliance division. The company claimed that the acts of Congress creating the Labor Relations Board contravened the fifth and tenth amendments to the United States Constitution, that the board has no jurisdiction over the company's affairs and that it has acted in an arbitrary and capricious manner in conducting hearings.

Annulment Denied On Tipsiness Plea

Too many marriages are contracted today without serious intentions, and those who enter marriage lightly must not expect the court to relieve them of their responsibilities, Judge Charles W. Woodward, of Montgomery County Circuit Court, at Rockville, Md. ruled yesterday in denying a petition for an annulment to Mrs. Julia Thera Moxley, of Washington.

Mrs. Moxley asked the annulment because, she said, she was intoxicated at the time of her marriage to Louis F. Moxley, jr., Washington tenor, at Rockville September 6, 1930. Testimony of Moxley did not corroborate her statement, the court held. Judge Woodward declared the marriage could be annuled only if she was mentally incapable at the time, and he did not believe from the evidence that this was so. The petition for annulment was filed June 13.

Council Backs Job Proposal For Alexandria

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The Alexandria City Council last night appointed a committee to cooperate with the Chamber of Commerce in conferring with the Secretary of the Navy in an effort for resumption of activities at the Alexandria Naval Torpedo Station on a scale which will increase employment here. The question was brought up by Mayor E. C. Davison, who showed that during 1922 the torpedo station employed 567 men, while in 1934 there are only 32 men employed. The committee is composed of Councilmen Cooper, Lamond and Clift.

The city has been requested by the Rotary Club to r ume the operation of the Alexandria Children's Home and Day Nursery. President L. E. Roland, of the Rotary Club, addressed a letter t the council stating that the project, sponsored by the Rotary, originally contemplated a day nursery to aid mothers in caring for their children while the mothers are employed during the day, but there are now 15 children living at the home permanently, six of whom were committed by the Alexandria Juvenile Court, and for whom the city pays $5 a week board each. The matter was referred to the welfare committee for a report. The scope of this committee was enlarged to include employment service and other welfare agencies.

The city engineer reported, in compliance with a council resolution, on the qualifications of Ward Brown as an architectural supervisor. Councilman Ashton said he desired a statement from the city manager as to the reasons for Mr. Brown's employment on the new high school building, and his duties. Acting City Manager Dunn said Mr. Brown was employed by City Manager Lawrence as a resident inspector. The State architect, according to Mr. Dunn, furnishes architectural supervision to a limited extent, when requested to send a man to Alexandria, but the job requires a man in constant attendance.

Dispensary Asked.

Miss Fanny Carter, superintendent of the Alexandria Hospital, wrote the council requesting that the city establish a dispensary for the treatment of emergency cases, including drunks, and this was referred to the city health officer for a report as to cost.

Appropriations of $4,860 for a sewer from Hooffs Run to the new high school building, and $450 for additional pipe in connection with the sewer at Clifford avenue and Bellefonte avenue were approved. A resolution appropriating $1,200 for resurfacing Mansion Drive was held over under the rules.

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the Alexandria Fire Department was authorized to hold Tag Day October 27, and the Disabled Veterans of the World War to hold their annual forget-me-not sale Friday, Saturday and Monday.

Mrs. Ballenger Reelected.

Mrs. Martin Ballenger was reelected president of the Alexandria and Fairfax County Circles of King's Daughters at the thirty-sixth annual gathering, held in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Alexandria, yesterday.

The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Perch Foster Hall, rector of the church, and the annual report presented by Mrs. Ballenger.

The morning session featured a memorial service for the members who have died in the past year. They were Miss Rebecca Klipstein, St. Luke's Circle; Mrs. Ghesser, of the What-So-Ever Circle, and Mrs. Mabel Blunt Lawler and Mrs. Rise, of Mount Vernon Circle.

Luncheon was served by the ladies of St. Paul's Church.

Mrs. Henry S. Eley, State president of the organization, spoke on "Applied Christianity;" Mrs. Bellenger on "Service Above Self."

Mrs. Henry Augustine Latane gave a talk on the work of the Alexandria Children's Home and Day Nursery; Mrs. Rathbone Smith on Ivakota Farm, Mrs. Russell Lyon on Red Cross work, and Mrs. William Cleveland on the Fairfax County welfare work.

Music was furnished by Mrs. Harris White, Mrs. Joseph Hoefft and Mrs. D. C. Boor.

Will Aid Needy Pupils.

Mrs. Leroy Peabody, chairman of welfare of the Alexandria Parent-Teacher Council, and Mrs. Wayland C. Kidd, president of the general council, held a meeting Monday of all chairmen of the different school groups, and outlined plans for caring for needy school children. Policeman George Welker spoke, presenting a proposition to provide shoes for the children.

The meeting of the general Parent-Teacher Association council Tuesday will be devoted to perfecting plans for this work.

Governor Is Luncheon Guest

Gov. Ritchie of Maryland, Democratic nominee for reelection, pauses outside the doors of Trinity Episcopal Church parish hall, Upper Marlboro, for a hearty laugh with Miss Marie Keys, of Mount Rainier, and Miss Beatrice Clare, of Riverdale, ushers at the luncheon given by the United Democratic Women's Club of Southern Maryland. Gov. Ritchie was guest of honor.

Aid to Needy To Be Stressed, Ritchie States

Governor Addresses Rally of Democratic Women in Upper Marlboro.

Aid for unemployed will be stressed in the coming Maryland election campaign, Gov. Albert C. Ritchie yesterday told several hundred women gathered in Upper Marlboro at a rally under auspices of the United Democratic Women's Clubs of Southern Maryland.

Gov. Ritchie declared the National and State governments must be responsible for the welfare of persons forced into idleness from causes beyond their control, provided first that local welfare organizations are unable to cope with the situation.

Policies of President Roosevelt were strongly indorsed by the Governor, who likened the present economic crisis to an emergency brought about by war. In such a situation, Gov. Ritchie said, new paths must be sought and found, with the ultimate aim of getting back to the fundamental principles of democracy.

Prefers U. S. Form of Rule.

The Governor declared that after his recent visit to Europe and observation of conditions on the continent he strongly favors our capitalistic form of government. With all of its ills, he said, it is much to be preferred to those ruled by "foreign despots."

Gov. Ritchie laid stress on the well-organized budget system of the State, declaring Maryland finances were never in better condition. A short time ago, he said State bonds were sold at 9 per cent above par.

Organization work of the United Democratic Women's Club was praised by the Governor.

A united front will confront the Republican party in November, the Governor stated. Primary election breaches have been healed and differences forgotten, he declared.

Chairmen Make Reports.

The morning session was opened with an address of welcome by State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer. A business meeting followed, marked by reports of chairmen from the various southern Maryland counties. These were submitted by Mrs. Elva S. Bohannan, Charles County; Mrs. Harry Wise, St. Marys County; Mrs. Abran Moss, Anne Arundel County, and Mrs. Harry Nalley, Prince Georges County.

Addresses were made by Mrs. Mary H. Duvall, of Baltimore, president of the United Democratic Women's Clubs of Maryland, and Miss Ruth Shoemaker, of Montgomery County, candidate for the House of Delegates.

Other speakers on the afternoon program were Miss Lavinia Engle, of Montgomery County, candidate for county commissioner; Mrs. June Fickel, of Iowa, member of the Democratic National committee.

Lyddane Quits Election Post In Montgomery

Says Democratic Leader Asked Resignation; Prescott Denies It.

Resignation of Kenneth Lyddane, Rockville attorney, as counsel to the Board of Election Supervisors of Montgomery County, Md., was announced yesterday by F. Byrne Austin, clerk to the board. The resignation was accepted yesterday.

Lyddane's resignation followed his withdrawal from the county Democratic organization and transfer of allegiance to the Fusion party several weeks ago. Lyddane said yesterday his resignation had been asked by Stedman Prescott, county Democratic organization leader, because he left the Democratic ranks.

Prescott last night declared he had not asked for Lyddane's resignation. "I was just talking to him as a friend," Prescott said. "He told me of his plans and I told him that any man who had accepted an appointment under a political organization who turned against them should out of common decency tender his resignation. I definitely did not request that he resign."

Demand for Post Alleged.

The Maryland News, organ of the Democratic organization, several days ago carried a story charging Lyddane had demanded he be appointed attorney to the Montgomery County Liquor Control Board as the price for his remaining in the fold, and that Dr. Benjamin C. Perry, Bethesda organization leader, had told him he should go to Rockville for his patronage.

Lyddane also is examiner for the Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville. Whether he would resign from this post was not known last night.

Lyddane has been a member of the Democratic organization for years, but his sympathies have been lukewarm for several years because, presumably, he was not indorsed for the Democratic candidacy for State's attorney in the last election.

Lyddane last night issued the following statement:

"Today I resigned my position as attorney to the board of election supervisors of Montgomery County. When I accepted this appointment I felt that it was a legal appointment and not dependent upon political servitude to any organization. I, therefore, had no hesitancy in expressing my approval of the Fusion candidates and their program of county improvement.

Surprised by Request.

"Yesterday Stedman Prescott, Lee organization candidate for the State Senate, requested me to resign my position because of my sympathy for the Fusion movement.

"I was surprised that Prescott requested my resignation since he has no official connection with the board which had appointed me. Today I have obtained from the board, two out of three members of which have been appointed upon Lee's recommendation, the verification of Prescott's disapproval in his capacity as assistant county boss.

"Being forced to choose between my rights as a citizen and my position I immediately resigned."

Although it could not be authenticated last night, it is understood Robert B. Peter, jr., former State's attorney of the county and now practicing with his father, former Judge Robert B. Peter, in Rockville, will be selected for the election board post, which has especial importance at present because of the impending election.

Traffic Hazard Study Planned At Arlington

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

Elimination of the many traffic hazards that have been created through construction of both the Wilson boulevard and Washington street approaches to the Arlington Memorial Bridge will be studied by the roads and streets committee of the Arlington County Civic Federation at a meeting to be held Friday night at the home of R. E. Royall, chairman. The committee will make its recommendations to the federation at its meeting next Tuesday night.

In a letter addressed last night to Chairman Royall, President Arthur Orr requests immediate steps be taken to formulate plans whereby the intersections mentioned may be properly safeguarded.

In addition to the most dangerous condition where Wilson boulevard crosses the Military road, Mr. Orr points out, there is equally as dangerous a situation at the intersections of both Wilson boulevard and Washington street approaches with the old Georgetown-Alexandria pike. There appears but one solution at this point, he said, and that is adequate lighting.

Another matter which Orr brings to the committee's attention and which he asks for a report on is formation of a triangle at the point where the Mount Vernon Memorial highway intersects with Arlington National Cemetery approach to the Memorial Bridge.

The committee is further asked to recommend a definite plan for submission to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission relative to the elimination of this traffic hazard.

Green to Speak.

John Locke Green, Republican nominee for Congress from the Eighth Congressional District, of which Arlington County is a part, will address the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County at its meeting today in the Calvary Methodist Protestant Church at Aurora Hills. Other speakers who have been invited are Senator Harry Flood Byrd and Representative Howard W. Smith.

Preceding the meeting, luncheon will be served at 12:30 by the Ladies Aid Society of the church, to which the public is invited.

The nominating committee which will select a slate of officers to be elected at the January meeting will be elected at this meeting.

Ward Named Leader.

The February graduating class at the Washington-Lee High School perfected its organization at assembly yesterday with the election of Edwin Ward as its president.

Other officers elected were Dorothy Sampsell, vice president; Gordon Beale, treasurer; Doris Moulton, secretary, and Alfred Montague, sergeant at arms. Delegates to the students' association, which is composed of representatives from each class, are Orlando Birch, Roger Munford and Margaret Yost.

Election of officers of other classes will be held at assembly today.

Night Class Registration.

Registration for night classes at the Washington-Lee High School will be held next Monday evening at 7 o'clock, according to an announcement last night by S. P. Vanderlip, principal. Thomas H. Christie, member of the faculty, will be principal of the night school.

For any subject for which there is sufficient enrollment a course will be offered, Christie stated. The enrollment last year was in excess of 100 and indications are that the enrollment this year will be much greater, he asserted.

Because appropriation was provided in the school budget to take care of operation of night classes a tuition fee covering the actual cost of instruction, of $10 a semester, is charged. There will be a rental fee of $2 for the use of text books, which will be refunded when all books used have been returned.

Classes will be held Monday, Wednesday and Thursday from 7 to 10 o'clock.

Wisconsin Ave. Improvements Are Approved

Action of Commissioners Speeds Widening From D. C. to Bethesda.

Speedy improvement of Wisconsin avenue from the District line to Old Georgetown road in Bethesda, Md., was presaged yesterday when the Montgomery County commissioners approved plans for the widening and improvemet of the avenue presented by the Maryland State Roads Commission.

It was indicated that work on the project, using PWA labor, would be started soon.

The improvement program is to begin without taking cognizance of the street car tracks, ownership of the right of way of which is still in doubt. Committees are working now to determine the ownership. Should the street car company find it necessary to bear the cost of the repairs, it has been hinted that it will relinquish the right of way and substitute bus service.

The plans call for widening the street to 75 feet, grading the west side to the same grade as the east side and construction of curbs, gutters and sidewalks.

The improvement has been sought for several years by the residents of the communities bordering the street and other Bethesda district groups. It was included as one of the pledges of the Democratic organization in the last election that this thoroughfare would be improved.

The commissioners also ordered the change in zoning classification of the property known as the Silver Spider in Brookmont from commercial to residential. The change had been asked by the Civic League of Brookmont and vicinity.

County Heads Approve Bus, Trolley Passes

Capital Concern's Plan Is Found Satisfactory by Prince Georges.

Approval of the plan of the Capital Transit Co. for the substitution of the weekly pass system on its bus and street car lines into nearby Maryland was given by the Prince Georges Chamber of Commerce at its first fall meeting Monday night in the Metropolitan District Building at Hyattsville.

Ralph W. Powers, chairman of the chamber's public utilities committee, explained that the pass system is scheduled to go into effect for a 13-week trial period beginning next Sunday, subject to approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The plan provides for street car passes, giving unlimited use during the week for which they are sold, to cost $1.25 for the first zone and 25 cents for each additional zone. On buses the charge for the first zone will be $1.50, with a charge of 25 cents for each additional zone. Passes for use on either bus or street car in either Maryland or the District will cost another 25 cents additional.

Dr. H. T. Willis, Mayor of Hyattsville, told the chamber that there is too much overlapping of government functions in the suburban area caused by many towns in close proximity. As a remedy he suggested a consolidation of municipalities.

One of the greatest handicaps to the proper development of the towns, Dr. Willis said, is their conflicting systems of road improvements. He said the time has come when towns must stop assessing road improvements to the abutting property owners because costs have risen so as to be practically confiscatory.

W. F. Mulligan, vice president of the chamber, and chairman of its roads, parks and lights committee, reported indorsement for the paving of Roosevelt avenue in Seat Pleasant by the county commissioners had been obtained and that recommendation of the project to the State roads commission had been made.

The desirability of converting the new Hyattsville postoffice, soon to be constructed, into a central distributing office was expressed by B W. Anspon, retiring chairman of the civic affairs committee.

The newly appointed civic affairs committee, of which W. Waverly Webb was named chairman, was instructed to cooperate with the County Volunteer Firemen's Association in the observance of fire prevention week, October 7 to 14.

Fred L. Watkins, Seat Pleasant, and Vincent Tompkins, jr., Hyattsville, were elected to membership in the chamber. It was announced the next meeting, October 22, would be a dinner meeting at the Beaver Dam Country Club.

Secret Panel in Hauptmann's Home Yields Data Linking Him to 'Jafsie'

Sliding Boards Reveal Condon Phone Number

tradition would be sought "in the near future," it was learned from a high New Jersey official that two new witnesses had entered the case there.

This official, who would not permit the use of his name, said one of the witnesses had expressed a belief Hauptmann's picture looked like a man he saw in a lane near the Lindbergh estate the morning before the kidnaping.

The other witness has told of seeing a man resembling Hauptmann in nearby Hopewell at about that time.

As Foley reiterated that he had an "iron-bound" extortion case against the prisoner, Governor Moore said:

"I am convinced that we have definitely established a case on which we can try the prisoner for kidnaping and murder. He will be returned to New Jersey in the near future."

In anticipation of Col. Lindbergh's appearance at the Bronx County Courthouse tomorrow, possibly to confront Hauptmann, police heads assigned 232 men to protect him from curious throngs there.

Both in Seclusion.

The aviator and his wife went into seclusion after their arrival, declining to disclose their plans.

Plans to continue the scrutiny of Hauptmann's modest home, inch by inch, were laid for tomorrow.

Discussing the latest bits of evidence, District Attorney Foley said:

"When I said we had an iron-bound case I meant it, but it depended on a lot of evidence. Today, however, Inspector Bruckman brought from the home of the defendant the boards taken from inside a closet. The case is now completely broken.

Numbers Being Checked.

"One of the boards had been smudged and partially obliterated, but we could make out the penciled address, 2974 Decatur avenue, and a phone number, Sedgwick 3-5714. That was Condon's phone number at the time of the negotiations.

"We showed this to the prisoner. Hauptmann, who admitted having written this notation.

"There also was written on a board in the closet the serial numbers of certain bills. These numbers are now being checked. One of them, and possibly all, we believe will turn out to be numbers of the Lindbergh bills. This board could be inserted or removed at will."

Footprints Similar.

The chain of circumstances which authorities hope will link Hauptmann to the abduction, as well as to the $50,000 ransom extortion, was further strengthened by two other major developments:

1. The disclosure by Department of Justice agents that the footprints of the one-time machine gunner in the German army are similar to those found in the earth about the Hopewell, N. J., home of the Lindberghs.

2. The discovery in the garage of Hauptmann's home of nails similar in size and markings to those used in construction of the ladder, up which the kidnaper climbed the night of March 1, 1932 to steal the famous baby from his crib.

As the minute search of the Hautmann home brought forth the new evidence—District Attorney Foley of the Bronx conducted another line of witnesses before the grand jury, seeking a quick indictment of the former carpenter on the extortion charges.

At midafternoon, the grand jury was adjourned to await the appearance of Col. Lindbergh.

The Lindberghs spent last night in a small Missouri town. They refueled their plane at Cincinnati and stopped briefly at Uniontown, Pa.

In making the disclosure on the footprints, the Department of Justice agents disclosed they also are comparing plaster casts of Hauptmann's prints with those found by the hedge in St. Raymond's Cemetery—the spot where "Jafsie" paid over the ransom money for the baby's return.

Fisch Angle Still Studied.

In line with their repeated assertions that the case is "by no means" ended as concerns Isadore Fisch, Hauptmann's friend who went to Germany and died in Leipzig, the Federal agents disclosed they were seeking Fisch's footprints or a shoe to compare these, too, with the indentures in the cemetery, and at the Hopewell home.

Although Foley has discounted any Fisch connection, the Federal agents have resolutely held to the belief that Fisch may have been implicated.

The address and telephone number of Dr. John F. Condon, "Jafsie," was found on this panel in the home of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, accused of receiving the $50,000 ransom money which "Jafsie" paid to the supposed abductors of the Lindbergh baby.

who, Hauptmann has said, left the ransom bills with him when he went to Germany—as saying "that during 1932 Isadore sent plenty of money" to members of his family in Germany. This was denied by a brother.

With the extortion case apparently near completion in the Bronx, awaiting only the testimony of Lindbergh, it was learned from an authoritative New Jersey source that the kidnap-murder case in that State is by no means complete.

Loopholes Admitted.

This source stated that the fatal abduction charges against Hauptmann still have several loopholes.

The source frankly said the Jersey officials haven't the evidence, yet, to bring Hauptmann to trial, but are confident they will obtain it within a short time, despite Gov. Moore's statement to the contrary.

Lacking this evidence, they would not jeopardize the chances of an extortion verdict in New York by bringing Hauptmann prematurely to trial in New Jersey.

That the Jersey officials expect their case to be complete soon was clearly indicated in the decision of Gov. Moore that if Hauptmann is taken across the Hudson he would be placed in the State Prison at Trenton.

Isolated cells are available in the State Prison. The county jail at Flemington, in the county where the kidnap-murder trial would occur, was not deemed adequate.

Foley Aids N. J. Case.

There was every indication that in presenting his extortion case before the grand jury, Foley also was trying to build up links for the kidnap-murder charges in New Jersey.

Supporting this theory, Inspector Bruckman placed before the jurors a 10-foot section of a 2-by-4, brought from the Bronx lumber yard to which was traced the lumber used in building the ladder found at the Hopewell home.

Also, all of the notes in the case have been given the jurors—even that found on the window sill a few minutes after the Lindbergh baby was snatched from his crib, to be found dead two months later in the woods a few miles from the Lindbergh home.

These notes were identified before the jury by Albert D. Osborn, expert retained by the United States Treasury on frequent occasions, as of Hauptmann's handwriting.

Late today Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf hastened again to the Bronx to confer with Foley.

Breckinridge Testifies.

Among the grand jury witnesses today was Col. Henry Breckinridge, Lindbergh's counsel, who has figured prominently in the search from the outset.

The attorney would not discuss the case. Neither would he say whether he planned to confer late tonight or tomorrow with Lindbergh—as was expected.

"At this stage of the case, I think it's best for me to keep my silence," Breckinridge said.

The short session of the grand jury was ended with the appearance of six clerks from the office of J. P. Morgan & Co. and several Bronx shopkeepers.

The Morgan clerks, presumably, told of preparing the list of serial numbers of the ransom bills—by which constant check was kept of their appearance, a check that led to Hauptmann's arrest last week.

The shopkeepers were those who had received the ransom bills in payment for merchandise. At least one of these has identified Hauptmann as the passer.

House Searched in Secret.

In the renewed search through the Hauptmann home and garage—where, in the latter place, $13,750 in ransom bills was found cached under flooring and in a window sill—police took along half a dozen carpenters.

Reporters and visitors were barred. After working all day, the carpenters left. Whether anything in addition to the nails and the secret panels was found was not disclosed.

From the screeches of timber and nails heard outside the home, it was believed they had literally torn the walls apart.

Hauptmann, as stern-faced and close-mouthed as ever, was returned to the jail late today.

Earlier he conferred with his counsel, James M. Fawcett, and afterward the attorney issued this statement for Hauptmann:

"I wish to say to people and German-Americans I hope they believe my statement and help me. Seeing my wife and baby made me feel better. I hope the truth will be had soon. I always have been good father and husband. I hope I get cleared soon."

Denies Threats to Wife.

Fawcett, told of reports that Mrs. Hauptmann had received threatening letters, said:

"This is not true. All mail received has been of a sympathetic nature."

With the search spreading into many States, there was evidence that Hauptmann, his wife and nephew, Hans Mueller, camped on an island off the Georgia coast in 1932 and 1933, while the international search was at its height.

It had been established previously that the Hauptmanns took long automobile trips and once went to Florida.

That Hauptmann also went on a hunting trip into the Maine woods was indicated with the statement of a guide, Earl Lister, that he so accompanied a man answering Hauptmann's description in 1932.

Federal agents were put at once on the trail of these new clews.

Most significant of the developments, however, was discovery of the "Jafsie" telephone number at the Hauptmann home.

First Contacted by Phone.

The first contact with "Jafsie" by the supposed kidnaper was by telephone, after he had inserted advertisements in the Bronx Home News. On several other occasions, the telephone was used by the man known only in the search as "John,"—the man to whom Dr. Condon paid the ransom.

In presenting this latest evidence to the grand jurors, the panels were taken into the jury room.

Describing the search through the Hauptmann home, Inspector Bruckman said the panels were found in a built-in closet in the nursery.

The telephone number and address were scribbled on a side panel of the closet. The serial numbers of bills were written on a panel of the door. Like the panel, the door was at once taken to the grand jury room. Later, it was displayed to newspapermen and photographers in Foley's office.

This room, from all appearances, was Hauptmann's bookkeeping department. Over the serial numbers on the door was the figure "$500." What it related to, authorities did not know. Below this, the numbers were listed: B00009272A and B00007162A.

Hauptmann's Cell in Jersey Is Century Old

Prisoner to Be Kept in State Prison; Trial at Flemington.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 25 (AP).—A 100-year-old cell in State prison—a thick-walled, vaulted chamber with a narrow barred window and a double door, one of steel and one of heavy planking—may be used to house Bruno Richard Hauptmann when the Lindbergh kidnaping suspect is brought to New Jersey for trial.

The trial itself probably will be at Flemington, county seat of Hunterdon County, in which the body of Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., was found.

Gov. A. Harry Moore pointed out the county jail at Flemington would not be adequate, and Commissioner of Institutions and Agencies William J. Ellis suggested the ancient cell in State prison to isolate the prisoner from other convicts.

Gov. Moore stated after a conference with Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of State police, that "as the evidence develops our case gets stronger and stronger."

He reiterated previous assertions that New Jersey would proceed with care to avoid legal difficulties in bringing Hauptmann into New Jersey on charges of "kidnaping and murder" and indicated extradition might not be sought for a month.

The State's legal authorities, including Attorney General David T. Wilentz, Assistant Attorney General Joseph Lannigan and Prosecutor Anthony Hauck of Hunterdon County, boiled down the huge mass of evidence collected since the kidnaping March 1, 1932, seeking to determine how much new evidence they should divulge in seeking the extradition of Hauptmann from New York.

Schwarzkopf yesterday announced the charge on which the German carpenter would be tried would be "kidnaping and murder" and Hunterdon County authorities have on hand seven "John Doe" murder indictments, returned by a grand jury in that county shortly after the baby's body was found.

The State police head revealed that none of the Lindbergh ransom money had been found in circulation since the arrest of Hauptmann, but added there is still some in circulation and "may be for another year or two."

He reiterated that no fingerprints were found at the scene of the abduction or on the ransom notes sent to Col. Lindbergh or Dr. John F. Condon, who paid over $50,000 to a man known as "John" and added he had obtained Hauptmann's fingerprints last week as a "routine police procedure."

He stated that only the notes received by Col. Lindbergh and Dr. Condon were in the same handwriting as the original note left at the scene of the kidnaping. Albert S. Osborn, New York handwriting expert, already has identified those notes as having been wirtten by Hauptmann.

Schwarzkopf said he was unable to answer a questioner who asked if Lindbergh saw a man, supposedly a "lookout," at the Bronx cemetery when the ransom was paid. He asserted the gold embargo was "unquestionably of value" in the "solution of the case" and praised the press services and newspapers for their "wholehearted support in keeping from the kidnapers the knowledge these bills (the ransom money) were being picked up and traced."

Georgians Tell Of Hauptmann Visit to Resort

Kidnap Suspect Camped at Savannah at Height of Search.

Savannah, Ga., Sept. 25 (AP).—Savannah officers today announced evidence had been uncovered that Bruno Richard Hauptmann, held in connection with the Lindbergh kidnaping, spent some time quietly at Savannah Beach, a resort near here, while a world-wide search was on for the kidnaper.

A. L. Hildreth, chief of Savannah Beach police, who first broke the information after being tipped by a local newspaper, questioned residents of the island with Julian Hartdridge, assistant United States district attorney.

Several residents said Hauptmann camped in a tent near Lazeretto bridge several days either in July or August, 1932. The Lindbergh baby was kidnaped March 1 of that year.

Residents said Mrs. Hauptmann and Hans Mueller accompanied Hauptmann on his first visit, and that all were known by their right names. One woman said she had corresponded with Mrs. Hauptmann since the visit.

Hauptmann was driving a car of the same make that he had registered in New York.

The Savannah Press quoted residents of the island as saying a pistol and a high-powered rifle of German make were in the Hauptmanns' baggage. One recalled the man once tried to get a $20 bill changed, but was unsuccessful.

Early in 1933 Hauptmann and his wife again passed through Savannah and stopped at a hotel. They were believed to have been on the way to Florida. They renewed acquaintances here.

Agents Believe Kidnaper Slew Colonel's Baby

Proving of Murder Might Cost Abductor's Life If Convicted.

The Department of Justice is working on the theory that Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., was murdered and not killed accidentally, officials said yesterday.

Other investigating authorities have adhered to the theory the kidnaped baby was fatally injured in a fall, possibly while being carried by the abductor down the ladder at the Lindbergh home.

It was pointed out, unofficially, that a kidnaper might find it more convenient to dispose of his precious and dangerous captive before opening negotiations for ransom.

The ultimate opinion of the Department of Justice may, in fact, depend upon conclusions reached after a thorough psychological study of Bruno Richard Hauptmann in the event no accomplice is linked to the crime.

May Hold Hauptmann Fate.

Because of the circumstantial nature of the evidence against Hauptmann and because the maximum penalty under the New Jersey kidnaping law is life imprisonment, his life, in event of conviction as the kidnaper, may depend on the theory finally adopted on the cause of the baby's death, it was pointed out.

Department of Justice officials yesterday indicated it may be several weeks before all the loose ends of their investigations are drawn together sufficiently to present a definite solution of the case.

Although still following every clew that suggests an accomplice, at least one high Justice Department official is known to adhere to the belief that the kidnaping was a one-man job.

J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation, confirmed the report from New York that the telephone number of Dr. John F. ("Jafsie") Condon had been found written on a closet panel in Hauptmann's home. He spoke of the find as "an excellent piece of information."

No immediate confirmation could be obtained of the report that the Savannah chief of police identified Hauptmann from newspaper photographs as a man who had spent several weeks in the spring of 1932 on an island near Savannah with his wife and nephew.

Footprints Similar.

Officials said agents, since Hauptmann's arrest, have been trying to trace all of his movements from the night of the kidnaping to his arrest last week. This will take some time.

Justice Department spokesmen also confirmed by implication that the footprints of Hauptmann were found to be similar to those discovered near the Lindbergh home and in the Bronx cemetery and copied in plaster casts.

While explaining all clews are regarded as important and that those which are substantiated will be added to the accumulated evidence, officials were not inclined to consider the footprints as significant.

It was said the footprints discovered near the Lindbergh home were not very clear and appeared to have been disguised, while those in the cemetery were clearer. Because of the passage of two and a half years, however, it was intimated that the prints could hardly be matched accurately unless the shoes used by the kidnaper the night he collected the ransom are found.

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings left yesterday afternoon for New York City, ostensibly to address a woman's conference, but he is expected to meet Col. Lindbergh and New York and New Jersey authorities working on the case.

Widow's Acres Bring Oil Money After Wait

Oklahoma City (AP).—For six years Mrs. Hazel Johnson watched from her cottage window the great Oklahoma City oil field spread about her 10 acres, stirring dreams of wealth.

Somehow the oil companies overlooked her little plot of ground. Her dreams didn't come true, and she went to work in a school cafeteria to support her three boys, whose father died four years ago. Recently a well was drilled. The estimated royalties are $18.75 a day.

HOW YOU ARE PROTECTED WHEN YOU BUY OUR CARS ON TIME

TO THOSE people who, instead of paying cash for their cars or trucks, prefer to take advantage of the convenient "time payment" plan of buying, we are glad to make this explanation of what financing should cost—and what the financing charge should cover.

The finance charge pays for the great convenience of buying in this manner. It covers interest on the money advanced by the finance company. It pays for credit and collection service, and more important—it provides adequate insurance for your car or truck while you are paying for it; insurance against the hazards of fire, theft and collision*.

The charge for financing added to the cash delivered price of the vehicle will give you the total cost if bought on time payments. Some people are confused by financing and do not understand its cost. By applying the rule set forth in the box at the right you can tell to the penny just how much the financing charge is on a car or truck under any plan.

We have provided for the time buyers of our cars and trucks the Official Chrysler Motors-Commercial Credit Plan of time payment financing. This plan assures you of a financing service courteously administered with adequate insurance protection and at the lowest possible cost.

Compare the financing charge under our Official Plan on a Plymouth, Dodge, De Soto, Chrysler, Dodge Commercial Car or truck, and you will find that it is as fair as the charge on any car you can buy.

Your financing arrangement is backed by the resources of Commercial Credit Company—a pioneer company in the field of automobile financing, with $40,000,000 invested capital. You receive an insurance policy written by one of the largest old line companies. More than 1800 trained employes and 142 Commercial Credit or subsidiary offices provide the utmost convenience—quick, considerate and courteous attention to all your dealings.

Chrysler Motors adopted the Official Chrysler Motors-Commercial Credit Plan as the fairest, soundest and most economical plan available. We believe it can be used as a fair comparison of what proper financing should cost.

We urge you, therefore, to cut out the box or copy off the rule worked out for you; use this rule to measure the cost of buying a car or truck on time. Pay no more than our Official Plan calls for—and you will pay no more than is fair.

*On Dodge Commercial Cars and trucks, collision insurance may be had at manual rates.

PAY NO MORE

Check Cost This Way:

1. Write here the amount your dealer asks as down payment (this may include trade-in value of an old car). $.....
2. Write here the total of all monthly payments required. $_____
3. Add the two figures above. Their sum is the total cost of car including financing and insurance. $.....
4. Write here the cash delivered price of the car. $_____
5. Subtract amount No. 4 from amount No. 3 above. The result is the total cost of financing, including insurance*. $.....

Then—compare this cost with the finance cost under the Official Chrysler Motors-Commercial Credit Plan, and pay no more for the financing of your car purchase.

*Fire—Theft—Collision.

Initiative of Industry Will Be Protected, Says Secretary.

dent units from their Federal dependence where it is possible for them to stand on their own feet."

The New Deal, he said, was designed in purpose and program "to reestablish balance and equilibrium to those segments of our economic and social system where, over a series of years, business initiative and effort have found it impossible to accomplish reconstruction alone."

"There are those who assert," he added, "that the New Deal means the complete abolition of 'the old order' of our economic and social system. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Will Retain Some Methods.

"New Deal leaders desire and the New Deal contemplates maintaining those institutions and methods which have proved to be sound, adequate and constructive in our progress thus far.

"It would safeguard these institutions by eliminating those deterrent factors, evils and abuses which contributed predominantly to the economic collapse from which we have all suffered so severely."

Conceding that the recovery program had not been perfect "either in conception or execution," Roper said:

"Mistakes have been made and methods have been changed and corrected, a process that will continue constructively throughout the tenure of the present Administration.

"Utter economical and social collapse has been prevented by the courageous action of President Roosevelt. The spirit and purpose of our Constitution have been adhered to in every sense of the word."

Industry's Stand Cited.

Declaring representations have come from some quarters that business opposes the principles of an organized National economy as exemplified in the recovery program, the Commerce Secretary cited report made by a committee appointed by the United States Chamber of Commerce a year and a half before the advent of the Roosevelt Administration. He quoted the report as saying:

"A freedom of action which might have been justified in the relatively simple life of the last century can not be tolerated today, because the unwise action of one individual may adversely affect the lives of thousands. We have left the period of extreme individualism and are living in a period in which National economy must be recognized as a controlling factor."

This statement from business itself, Roper said, was illustrative of similar pronouncements from other business groups during the same period.

"The New Deal," he added, "is fulfilling the principle and purpose of these convictions of business. It is seeking to replace that 'extreme individualism' mentioned by the Chamber of Commerce with 'constructive individualism.'

"In striving for these objectives, there is no attempt, either directly or indirectly, to detract from the full meaning and application of freedom and liberty under our present form of complex and interrelated society."

Parents Beg Word Of Nashville Girl; U. S. to Aid Search

Nashville, Sept. 25 (AP).—A day which brought numerous side developments in the Distelhurst kidnaping case, including a promise by Federal authorities to "render every possible service," failed to produce any definite leads toward solving the mystery.

The parents of 6-year-old Dorothy Distelhurst, who last was seen en route home from school last Wednesday afternoon, waited vainly for some reply to two public letters they issued.

One message renewed their offer that "no effort will be made to cause trouble" if kidnapers attempt to get in touch with them, and the other asked rivermen to drag the Cumberland River on the possibility the child's body may be found there.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the United States Department of Justice Bureau of Investigation, in answer to telegraphic requests from United States Senators McKellar and Bachman, said:

"I have instructed special agents of this division to render every possible assistance in this matter."

Meanwhile, reports began to arrive at police headquarters that various people resembling the girl and a possible abductor had been seen at widely scattered points. Each was being investigated.

Talmadge Assails U. S. in Business

Georgia Governor, in Chicago, Against 'Meddling.'

Chicago, Sept. 25 (AP).—Governmental participation in private business was criticized today by Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia in speaking on the Georgia Day program at A Century of Progress Exposition.

The participation of Government in business can not last, Gov. Talmadge told his audience in the court of Hall of States. It is his opinion that Government should be an unpire or referee, not an active participant in business.

"I hold this to be a fundamental principle, and when we have returned to it, as I think we shall, we will have turned the corner," he said.

tinue to have my loyalty and, when circumstances permit, my services in the new duties you have in mind.

"While I feel that my executive responsibility should cease at once, may I suggest that this resignation be effective October 15, in order to give me time to make such study of records as will enable me to make my final report. Sincerely,

"HUGH S. JOHNSON."

President's Acceptance Quoted.

The President's acceptance follows:

"Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1934.

"Dear Hugh:

"It is because you and I have felt for some time that NRA has fulfilled its first phase and calls for revision of its organization that I am accepting your resignation, to take effect October 15, as you suggest, in order that you may study the records preliminary to the making of your final report.

"I repeat what I have so often said to you—that I am happy not only in our friendship and your loyalty, but that in a time of great stress and fear your courage, enthusiasm and energy were a very potent factor in restarting a stalled machine. More than that it will always be remembered that under you the NRA in only a little over a year accomplished long overdue reforms in our social and business structures. The elimination of child labor, the recognition of the principles of a fair wage and of collective bargaining, and the first efforts to eliminate unfair practices within business—these, among many others are chalked up to your credit.

"I hope much that during these next few months you will get a thoroughly deserved rest, and that then you will be able to help me further in the new duties and new tasks of public service.

"I shall see you in Washington very soon.

"Faithfully yours,

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

President on Way Back.

The next step in the Administration program will get under way immediately, it was declared on behalf of the President, who boarded a special train shortly after the announcement to pick up the reins at Washington after a month's absence.

In his letter to the Chief Executive, Gen. Johnson confirmed reports that he had submitted his resignation to Mr. Roosevelt some time before, presumably at the time of his tiff with Donald R. Richberg over the proposed reorganization.

As one reason for stepping out, he pointed out to the President that revamping of the recovery machinery "is becoming momentarily more urgent"—thus recognizing, in effect, that his continuance as recovery administrator was holding up the program.

A further consideration, suggested in the Johnson resignation letter, was his own private affairs, which are understood to be in a chaotic condition because of the long hours of back-breaking work he has given to the codification of American industry—a job he began even before the National recovery act was passed June 16, 1933.

"New Duty" Unexplained.

His letter contained one cryptic, unexplained remark that his services would be available in the future for "the new duty you have in mind."

President Roosevelt threw no light on this, remarking only that he hoped Gen. Johnson would get a "thoroughly deserved rest, and that then you will be able to help me further in new duties and new tasks of public service."

For the present, at any rate, it was clear that the general's divorce from NRA was absolute.

On both sides there were expressions of loyalty and regard and every indication of an attempt to make the painful business as agreeable as possible.

Reorganization at Hand.

Mr. Roosevelt told Gen. Johnson that "long-overdue reforms"—such as the abolition of child labor and unfair trade practices, the institution of fair wages and collective bargaining—should be "chalked to your credit." It was because the NRA had fulfilled "its first phase,"

Civilian Planes For Battle Use Divide Experts

Commission Seeks to Fix Policy on Proposal for Aircraft.

(Associated Press.)

A determination of whether air development can be coordinated to facilitate quick conversion of civilian planes to fighting craft was said yesterday by Clark Howell, its chairman, to be an objective of the Aviation Commission.

Testimony before the commission, however, developed a division of opinion on whether attempts at unified development, even in commercial flying, were advisable.

Howell said testimony, when the National defense phase of public hearings was reached, would delve into the possibility of the Government regulating commercial airplane design to make possible easy installation of guns or bombing racks should this country be attacked from the air.

Information along this line also was expected to determine whether commercial pilots should be qualified to fly fighting planes.

Aviation Trend in Europe.

Howell recently returned from Europe, where, after an inspection of aviation trends, he reported other countries were placing intense emphasis on aviation as the most effective agency in war.

The commission, trying to outline a Federal aviation policy for President Roosevelt, already has received notice from Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, retired, that he would bring before it his long unsuccessful battle for a unified fighting air force.

The divided opinion of whether aeronautics should be supervised by a central Government agency in Washington was illustrated before the commission today when Rex Martin, of the Commerce Department air navigation division, disagreed with his chief, Ewing Y. Mitchell, Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of the Air Commerce Bureau. Mitchell had recommended a permanent aviation authority be given full control over all phases of commercial aeronautics.

In the same hearing, Louis R. Inwood, representing independent operators, recommended "all Governmental regulations pertaining to aviation be vested in a single organization, preferably the Bureau of Air Commerce."

A permanent commission should be set up, too, he said, and for purposes of regulation the air should be classified as Federal property as are navigable bodies of water.

Mail Funds "Vital."

Adequate mail pay or a subsidy for mail passenger service was described yesterday by Eugene L. Vidal, director of Air Commerce, as vital to the development of air transport and its safe operation.

In a statement read at the hearing by Martin, Vidal said:

"Wherever it is felt that an air service is worth while as a means for more rapid communication and transportation, which after all accelerates commerce and brings closer the people of separated sections, the mail pay or subsidy should be sufficient for the efficient operator, or the route should be discontinued.

"If legislation as to air mail is being considered by the commission it is suggested that study be given to nonsubsidy pay for mail carrying combined, where necessary, with passenger subsidy."

Americans' Ranch In Mexico Seized

But Bandits Are Arrested, Property Recovered.

The State Department yesterday informed Representative West (Democrat), Texas, that Mexican troops had disarmed a band of Mexicans accused of seizing an American-owned ranch in Mexico and had ordered the trespassers to surrender the property, according to the Associated Press.

The ranch, called Las Rucias, is about 5 miles from Brownsville, Tex., on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande and is owned by the J. H. Fernandez estate.

West demanded State Department action after receiving a telegram from John G. Fernandez, manager of the ranch, that a group of Mexicans had forcibly occupied the property upon the claim that the Mexican agrarian law gave them the right to it.

$33.40 Average Is Made at Brookneal; Danville Reports $27 to $30.

Brookneal, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—With a break of 30,000 pounds, and an average of $33.40 a hundred, the Brookneal bright tobacco market started the new season today more auspiciously than at any time since the World War.

Growers who jammed the town's two warehouses were elated when high bids continued to pour in.

Today was the first time since the war that there has been a full set of buyers from all the large tobacco companies at one time. Warehousemen attributed the high prices to the reduced acreage this year and a better grade of tobacco.

Today's highest price was 61 cents a pound.

Danville Prices High.

Danville, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—Tobacco was selling high on the Danville market this afternoon and indications were that the average price per 100 pounds would be between $27 and $30, or double the average on the opening last season.

Unusually heavy deliveries marked the opening of this old belt market, and farmers from adjacent growing territory followed behind the auctioneers, giving voice to their satisfaction at the trend of prices. The average at the opening here last season was slightly over $13.

The opening sales on the market here, as well as throughout the old belt, were declared by experienced tobacconists to be the best since 1919. Fully a million and a quarter pounds were on the floors of the eight Danville warehouses when sales commenced this morning.

Warehousemen estimated that 60 per cent of today's offerings were low-grade primings, and that higher grades would bring higher prices.

At South Boston, where half a million pounds were offered for sale, market observers estimated the average would reach $35 per hundred. Two sales were held, running well into the afternoon.

Charleston, W. Va., Sept. 25 (AP). Police Chief John Britton and two other officers are en route to Chicago to question a suspect held in the murder of James Adkins, 56, of Lynchburg, Va.

Adkins, a traveling salesman, was shot to death as he stepped from an automobile on a brightly lighted business street in Charleston. Britton said the suspect in Chicago is Jimmie Nelson, colored, of Chicago.

Bandits Disarm Victim And Take His $960

Chicago, Sept. 25 (AP).—James Hajek, 22, took a revolver with him today when he and his brother, Emil, operators of a meat market, went to the bank to withdraw funds.

They got the money and James had the weapon in his hand as they started inside the market. Two men suddenly appeared, disarmed James, took the brothers captive, sped away with them in an automobile, and dumped them out after taking the money—$960.

Banker Ordered Back To N. J. for Theft Trial

Chicago, Sept. 25 (AP).—George Gray, 42, assistant manager of the Maywood, N. J., branch of the Peoples Trust Co. of Hasbrouck Heights, was ordered returned to New Jersey to face charges of embezzling $7,000 of the bank's money when arraigned today before Federal Judge Charles E. Woodward.

The former bank manager has been in Chicago for two months, but was not found until he attempted to commit suicide by gas last week.

Nome Gets Fresh Food First Time Since Fire

Nome, Alaska, Sept. 25 (AP).—High surf delayed the unloading of the steamer Victoria, but Nomeites today had a taste of the fresh meats and vegetables aboard the vessel just the same. Needed foodstuffs were brought aboard in a tug.

Most of Nome's food supply was destroyed in the $3,000,000 fire which leveled the business district last week.

Naval Parley Fate Is Up Next Month

probably without any of its members visiting Washington, it is said here.

Prospects of the simultaneous meeting of representatives from the three sea powers impressed authorities here with the possibility the gathering would turn out vastly more important than originally intended.

A substantial section of official and informed public opinion here foresaw the possibility it would be the only conference held, and therefore supplant the expected 1935 gathering.

Program Disagreement.

This view was based on indications of great disagreement among the powers on a conference program.

The Japanese are reported approaching the conversations with an extensive plan for revision of naval control, which, if not accepted as a basis for discussion, probably would cause Japan's virtual withdrawal from further exchanges and perhaps abrogation of the Washington naval treaty.

Japan reportedly seeks abolition of the ratio system, by which Great Britain and America have approximate naval parity represented by the figures 5 and 5, while Japan's strength is about 3.5. Japan is said to demand a 5-5-5 ratio, with the right to build her total tonnage in any type of ships instead of being limited to certain numbers of tons for battleships, cruisers and other vessels as all the powers are now.

The October meeting was arranged by the British government after preliminary talks with American and Japanese officials early in the summer.

Minnesota Professor Ends Life by Hanging

Winona, Minn., Sept. 25 (AP).—The body of Dr. Ernesto Murillo, 38, professor of French at the College of St. Teresa here, was found hanging today in a garage in the rear of the apartment house in which he lived.

Dr. Murillo came here from Baltimore, where he was in the Colombian consular service. Despondency over delay in publication of a book and loss of money in a business project were believed the reason for his suicide. Two sisters live in Baltimore.

Oppose Dill Radio Plan, Schall Asks Roosevelt

Senator Schall (Republican), Minnesota, sent a telegram yesterday to President Roosevelt asking that the Chief Executive "immediately denounce" the proposal by Senator Dill (Democrat), Washington, that the broadcasting companies set up their own news gathering agencies, the Associated Press says.

Schall called the proposal an "attempt to destroy our press services and in their stead create a Government-sponsored press agency."

Virginia Funds Cut, But Credit Standing Gains

Comptroller Declares Debt Situation Good, Cites Low Interest Rate.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—The affairs of Virginia have ben adjusted to a condition of materially reduced revenues from State sources "without imposing undue hardships upon any or seriously impairing the normal functions of public service," State Comptroller E. R. Combs reported to Gov. Perry today.

Citing, in his annual report, figures which make it "apparent that the State's general revenues for the year are at a level considerably lower than that of the previous year," Mr. Combs said "none can reasonably question the wisdom of the precautionary measure written into the general appropriation act of 1932, by which the Governor was granted authority to order reductions in appropriations when, in his judgment, such action was necessary to prevent the creation of a deficit."

He added, however, that the State's obligations have been met promptly; that not a dollar was lost from the public treasury through bank failures or receiverships, and that the credit of the Commonwealth "has not been impaired, but on the other hand, is at the highest level in her history."

In support of this last statement, Mr. Combs cited the issuance of $1,000,000 of refunding highway certificates of debt for a ten-year period ending 1944, at a premium and at an annual interest rate of only 2½ per cent—"the lowest interest rate of any issue of bonds or certificates of debt of the Commonwealth."

A previously announced deficit of $2,250,000 was mentioned in the report, and the comptroller said that except for the authority given the Governor to reduce appropriations this deficit of the general fund would have grown to approximately $9,300,000 as of June 30, 1934.

Total revenue collections from all sources in the fiscal year 1933-34 showed an increase of $1,768,199.99 over the previous year, but Mr. Combs said that the actual decline in funds obtained from State sources was observable when Federal road advances and other funds not receivable in the previous period were deducted.

Episcopal Mission Group Holding Meeting at Greenwood, Va.

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—Mountain workers of the Episcopal Church in the diocese of Virginia assembled for their annual conference tonight at Summer Rest, near Greenwood, and will be in session for three days.

Present at the opening session were over 50 men and women, including Bishop and Mrs. H. St. George Tucker, of Richmond; Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin, also of Richmond; the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, of Columbia, S. C.; Prof. C. W. Hummell, of Virginia Polytechnic Institute; Mrs. James Hill, of Orange; Mrs. Overton Dennis, Mrs. Thomas Dunn and Miss Charlotte Picot, all of Richmond, diocesan officers of the woman's auxiliary.

Rufus Morgan, and during the morning sessions talks will be made by Bishops Tucker and Goodwin, and Archdeacon Frederick W. Neve, of Ivy, who started the mountain work with the establishment of St. John the Baptist Mission in the mountains about 5 miles from Ivy, nearly 45 years ago.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon, group conferences will get under way, with Bishop Tucker conducting a conference with the men and Mrs. James Hill, of Orange, and other diocesan officers with the women.

On Thursday additional reports will be received from the mission workers, and the report of the findings committee will be submitted and discussed. The conference will close with a dinner at 1 o'clock.

Milbourne Named Acting Collector

Crisfield, Md. Sept. 25 (Spl.).—Former Senator Lewis M. Milbourne, of Somerset County, has been appointed acting collector of internal revenue for the District of Maryland, to succeed J. Enos Ray, deceased.

Mr. Milbourne was named chief deputy collector by the late Joshua W. Miles, and served during the Administration of President Woodrow Wilson. When Ray was appointed collector in July, 1933, he again designated Milbourne as chief deputy collector. During Mr. Ray's illness, Milbourne has been in charge of the office and is said to be being considered for a permanent appointment as a collector.

Milbourne represented the county in the House of Delegates in the session of 1904, and was chairman of the committee on Chesapeake Bay and tributaries, which had charge of the famous Haman oyster bill. His legislative experience was continued by service in the Senate during the sessions of 1908, 1910, and 1914, during which time he was chairman of the corporations committee and a member of the finance and all other important legislative committees. In 1914, he came within one vote of being elected president of that body.

New Hospital Held Up By Lack of Equipment

Chestertown, Md., Sept. 25 (Spl.). Because of lack of equipment the new Kent and Upper Queen Anne's County Hospital here will not open for a fortnight. Only throat operations will be performed there by Dr. F. A. Holden, of Baltimore, assisted by the local staff. The institution will be open two days a week and will not operate during the winter.

Three trained nurses here have been asked to donate their services until the hospital can be placed on a paying basis. It is hoped pledges to a campaign for funds will have been paid then. Some donors who have paid a part of their pledges assert they will not pay any more because they do not see the need of a hospital here with Easton and Elkton hospitals nearby.

Charter Given Morgan County Kiwanis Club

E. F. Hill, of Capital, Speaks in Program at Berkeley Springs.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—A charter was formally presented to the newly-organized Kiwanis Club of Morgan County at a "charter night" meeting here last night. Russell U. Adams, of Sistersville, W. Va., governor of the West Virginia district, presented the paper and Henry N. Gorrell, president of the new club accepted.

Va.) clubs, sponsors of the new club. J. A. Proctor, of Berkeley Springs, expressed the host club's welcome. Nearly 200 Kiwanians and their ladies attended the session, including delegations from Washington, Baltimore, Cumberland, Hagerstown and Frederick, Md.; Morgantown, Martinsburg and Charles Town, W. Glider Experts Hope for Storm Declare Record Is Unlikely Until Atmosphere Is Cleared.

Big Meadows, Va., Sept. 25 (AP). Some of the Nation's leading glider pilots tried again today to get their light craft into the air for flights which might set new records, but the longest flight was over in 15 minutes. Experts stuck to their opinion, strengthened by today's experience, that a thunderstorm is necessary to clear the air before any distant flight can be made.

Harold McMickles, chief pilot of Pan American Airways, with base at Lima, Peru, and his wife were guests today of the American Soaring Society, sponsors of the ten-day meet here.

Officials of the society said they hope at least to set a record for a return flight, if not to break existing records for altitude and distance, before the end of the meet. Neither America nor Europe now has a return glider flight record.

Secretary of War Dern is expected here Saturday.

Dr. Hans Luther, German Ambassador to the United States, was the principal speaker yesterday at the opening of the Orange County bicentennial celebration at Orange, Va. Dr. Luther Speaks at Germanna, Opening Orange Bicentennial

By Bart Sheridan.

Orange, Va., Sept. 25.—German-American amity should follow as a natural consequence of the cooperative pioneer spirit that imbued the early American settlers and the German immigrants who founded the first Reformed Church in the United States at Germanna in 1714, Dr. Hans Luther, German Ambassador to the United States, said today as he officially opened the Orange bicentennial celebration at Germanna, near here.

Speaking on the site where 42 German emigrants, seeking to escape the oppression of foreign powers in the early eighteenth century, established the first Protestant German settlement and began their worship, the ambassador stressed the common ideals of freedom and escape from oppression that prompted both the German settlers and the pioneers from Great Britain and Holland to expand and develop the virgin wilderness of the New World.

Lutheran Pastor Speaks.

Representing the Reformed Church in the United States, the Rev. S. L. Flickinger, pastor of the Centenary Reformed Church at Winchester, cited the need of a "recovery in love and loyalty to Christian ideals" such as formed the basis for the Germanna settlers' indomitable spirit.

The Rev. John H. Frey, pastor of St. Peter's Lutheran Church at Shepherdstown, W. Va., spoke for the Lutheran Church. He traced the development of the pioneer Lutherans and their relation to the Germanna group of the Reformed Church.

The Rev. C. K. Rhodes, pastor of the Lutheran Church of Madison County, opened the memorial ceremonies with an invocation and prayer for blessing. Justice George L. Browning, of the Virginia State court of appeals, presided. He introduced Mrs. William Jeffries Chewning, who extended greetings from the Fredericksburg Chapter of the Colonial Dames of America. Benediction by the Rev. A. M. Gluck, of the Christ Reformed Church at Martinsburg, W. Va., ended the commemoration.

Early Work Recalled.

Dr. Luther expressed a desire for friendship between Germany and the United States, declaring that such a condition was a natural outgrowth of the part taken by Germans in the development of colonial America.

"Next to the people of Great Britain," Mr. Luther said, "the people of Germany have had the largest share in building up the American Nation. They participated in the early days in exploring this vast country, in plowing the soil and sewing the seeds of flourishing times to come. The people of Germania, by developing iron mines initiated the long history of industries founded by Germans in this country, developing them hand-in-hand with immigrants from other nations."

The ambassador stressed the attitude of the eighteenth century Germans toward America as the land of promise and hope. The German nation, he said, has long been the battlefield of deadly wars in which other nations fought for their interests and took advantage of Germany's inability to protect herself to a sufficient degree. As a result, he continued, many of the people surviving after destruction by foreign armies left their Fatherland and sought new opportunities abroad.

"Not until the end of the nineteenth century," the speaker declared, "was it possible for the German people, by their first important step toward unification—a process only now fully completed—to enjoy a longer period of real peace."

Marker Erection Delayed.

Discussing the tie which he said exists between Germany and the descendants of the early settlers, of whom Germans formed so fundamental a part, Dr. Luther stated that "there is a special feeling of loyalty to common ancestry, to the spirit and deeds of one's forefathers. I wish to say that this feeling is still as much alive in Germany as it is here. The people over there will hear of this commemoration, and they will participate in it in spirit. This festival day will revive and strengthen the old ties of friendship between our two nations."

Erection of the marker indicating the site of the Germanna settlement was postponed until next week. A temporary plaque was set up today with ceremonies participated in by Misses Virginia and Alice Pauline Hoffman, lineal descendants of one of the original Germanna settlers. Mrs. V. G. Fleming, of Fredericksburg, decorated the plaque with a bouquet in behalf of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Fredericksburg.

Historic Estates Visited.

A tour of historic estates within the county was conducted this afternoon following Dr. Luther's address at Germanna. Estates visited were those at Bloomsbury, Meadow Farm, Montpelier, Peliso, Montebello, and Gordon Inn.

Portraying the varied history of the vast territory included in Orange County in the colonial and Revolutionary days, the Orange Centennial pageant, with a cast of more than 1,000 persons, was presented at its initial performance tonight.

With Miss Wycliffe Scott cast as Miss Orange County, the pageant was presented in a series of 12 episodes tracing the county's history from its early days of Indian domination.

The pageant opened with Miss Scott's presentation as Queen of the Centennial. After she was seated, her guests of honor were presented, led by Miss Allen Dunnington, "Miss 1734;" Miss Mary Beverly Grymes, "Miss 1834," and Miss Sallie Johnson, "Miss 1934."

Jewish Exercises Today.

Tomorrow's events will begin with Jewish memorial exercises at the Gordonsville High School, with an address by Virginia R. Shackleford, a member of the Virginia State Board of Education.

At 11:30 a. m. at Orange Court House, the Junior Woman's Club will pay tribute to William Monroe, with Dr. Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction, delivering the principal address. At 2 p. m. a tour of historic estates will take place, while at 3 p. m. Dr. S. C. Mitchell, of the University of Richmond, will speak on the "Baptist Church of Orange County." At 10:30 p. m. the official bicentennial ball will take place.

Thursday has been designated as Governor's Day. Gov. Peery is scheduled to arrive in Orange at 11 a. m. and will preside over the special celebration in the historic Orange County Courthouse, under the auspices of the Orange County Bar Association. Gov. Peery will introduce the speaker, Judge Gordon B. Ambler, of Richmond, great-grandson of Phillip Pendleton Barbour, associate justice of the United States Supreme Court under President Andrew Jackson. Judge Ambler will address the gathering in the robes worn by his distinguished ancestor while a member of the Supreme Court.

Col. Woodcock Gives Students A Conduct Code

New Head of St. John's College Addresses First Assembly.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 25 (Spl.). Addressing students of St. John's College at their first assembly today, Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, new president, laid down two principles, or rules of conduct, which he will insist upon, and which he said would redound to their success.

The former National prohibition administrator, who recently resigned the post of special assistant to the United States Attorney General, asserted he expected "everyone to work hard and be at all times a gentleman, in thought and action. Those are simple rules, easy to remember, and easy to keep, and they will yield a rich return in happiness and advancement."

President Woodcock added that if the students do not adhere to these rules, "they have no place in the company of scholars and must retire." He referred to the long life of St. John's and its traditions of loyalty, courage and patience, and expressed the hope that the boys would appreciate and absorb them.

He advocated an eight-hour day, including work in classroom and preparation, and advised participation in all activities, such as sports, music, plays, debates and journalism.

The college begins the year with a roll of 234 students, 101 of whom are freshmen. An increase of between 10 and 20 is expected in the latter within the next few days.

The miners are Caswell Hess and John Horton, believed to be still alive in the depths of the Excelsior Red Ash Co.'s mine at Raven, Va., 40 miles from Bluefield.

The fire started early in the day, 200 feet from the entry. Only the two men were behind the fire area and unable to reach the surface.

Legion Post Gets World War Gun For New Home

Keyser, W. Va., Sept. 25 (Spl.). After several years of effort, Boyce-Houser Post, American Legion, here has at last secured a World War gun. Now that the legion memorial home is an accomplished fact, the gun will be placed in front of it.

It is a 4.7-inch field gun, several feet long and in the best of condition. Stampings on the gun reveal it was made in 1918 and members of the legion expressed the belief it has never been used. It was obtained through the efforts of Representative Jennings Randolph, of this district.

The legion memorial home, where the gun will be placed, is nearly completed.

Farmer's Suit To Be Appealed

Maryland Man Seeks Aid Under Frazier-Lemke Mortgage Act.

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—Charles A. Compton, Carroll County farmer, late yesterday filed notice of appeal from the ruling of United States District Judge W. Calvin Chesnut preventing him from taking advantage of the Frazier-Lemke act in an effort to save his farm.

Judge Chesnut last week held unconstitutional the five-year clause of the farm mortgage moratorium amendment to the bankruptcy act. The judge also held the farmer had no standing in his court because his petition was filed after a county court had ratified the foreclosure sale and issued a writ of eviction.

Service of the writ was withheld until the decision of the Federal court was handed down. Compton and his son were evicted by deputy sheriffs last week after the Birnie Trust Co., of Taneytown, foreclosed on the property.

John W. Cleaton, who with Robert H. McNeil represents Compton, did not say on what grounds the appeal would be based. Cleaton issued a statement for Compton denying he had ever before been involved in a lawsuit.

Attorneys for William W. Bradford, Harford County farmer, whose petition seeking a stay in foreclosure was dismissed with Compton's, also plans an appeal.

Chemical Company Control Settled

Rehearing Denied in Suit Against Kemp Group.

Staunton, Va., Sept. 26 (Spl.). Controversy over control of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Corporation was settled today by the Supreme Court of Appeals, which refused a rehearing in the suit of Alfred Levinger against George S. Kemp and other directors of the firm.

Levinger, a director representing holders of common stock, sought to prevent the seating of directors elected last year by the prior preference stockholders' group. The court's decision paves the way for the prior preference group to hold another election on October 10, even though there should be no quorum of all classes of stock represented at the annual meeting.

The chief point at issue was whether or not the prior preference group retained the right to elect a majority of the board after the company had bought and placed in its own treasury a large block of this type of stock. Mr. Kemp and his associates held that this stock might be resold at any time and that its status was unchanged while Mr. Levinger contended it was in fact retired and its voting rights lost.

Conservation Post May Go to Dodson

Norfolk Man Considered for Chairmanship.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—E. Griffith Dodson, of Norfolk, is being considered by Gov. Peery for appointment as chairman of the State commission on conservation and development when the chairmanship becomes a full-time position, January 1, carrying a salary of $6,000 a year.

Mr. Dodson, who has been a member of the commission since its organization, has devoted a great deal of his time to the work and has been closely allied with the State Democratic organization. A Norfolk delegation went to Richmond several days ago to urge his appointment.

W. E. Carson, of Riverton, the present chairman of the commission, has been regarded as most likely to assume the full-time chairmanship, but he has not decided whether he would be able to leave his private business to give his entire time to the work. Thomas L. Farrar, of Charlottesville, another member, has been proposed for the full-time job.

'Hazers' Brand Students

Nitrate of Silver Used to Mark Emblem on Foreheads; Hagerstown School Bans All Imitations.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 25 (Spl.). Hagerstown High School officials placed thumbs down upon future initiations or hazings of students, and parents of a number of students were much concerned tonight following the painting of an emblem of a student organization upon the foreheads of a group of its new members at an initiation held last night.

Several of the students who reported for classes today bore the emblem painted on their foreheads with nitrate of silver. When the chemical began to blister the skin, some of the parents sent them to physicians.

High School faculty members said various student clubs formed through an organization outside the school have been trying to outdo each other in initiations until they are forced to warn the students that these initiations must not be carried into the schools.

Students who bore the emblem were sent home by the faculty, but were permitted to return when it was discovered it would require a week or more for the mark to wear off the skin.

Union Leader Fights $5 Fine in Danville

Richmond, Va., Sept. 25 (AP). Asserting "the principle is too important to abandon even though the strike has been settled," George E. Moorhouse, organizer for the United Textile Workers, said today he planned to carry to the highest State Court, if necessary, his appeal from a $5 fine imposed in Danville Police Court on a disorderly conduct charge.

Moorhouse was one of four members of a party of union members from Hopewell arrested when they went to Danville to attend a union meeting while the National textile strike was in progress. State labor leaders protested to Gov. Peery and sent counsel to represent Moorhouse and his companions at the hearing. Two of the men were dismissed, but Moorhouse and one other were fined.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

The Neighbors Are Certainly Good to the Creek Folks

Lots of people do harm at times when they don't really intend to, and don't even know that they have worried somebody; and at other times they give a lot of pleasure to somebody, without intending to or even knowing about it. It looks like Mrs. Man was fixing to do something nice for the Creek folks, but she really hadn't planned to do it. Anyway, on that Saturday afternoon when Uncle Joe's cider was going to be just right, she cooked two of the most puffy and brown ginger cakes that anybody ever saw. When Mr. Man saw them come out of the oven he told Mrs. Man that the only thing he knew that was prettier than those cakes was the cook. And then she kissed him right on the bald spot on top of his head. But that's something else. We were talking about those ginger cakes.

Of course Blackie and the boys knew all about the cakes, and they knew that the cider they had stowed away in the smokehouse was going to be best for drinking on Saturday night. There was plenty of cider, and to spare, and everybody on the Creek was invited over to Blackie's for supper. Because the cake might not be quite big enough to feed the crowd, Blackie cooked a big plate full of turnovers, for they are right next to ginger cake for going along with cider.

Jay Bird had to sit around a good bit before he found out just how and when the cake was going to start over to Uncle Joe's. It was pretty heavy, and so Mr. Man was going to take it over in his wagon, and would bring the jug of cider back; and he was to start just before sundown so the cake would be warm for Uncle Joe's supper. He did start off on time. But—he was just a hundred or two yards from the house, and had just turned the corner of the woods, when he heard that terrible squall of an owl that Mrs. Man had heard the day before, and that she had been trying to describe to him, and it was closely followed by an almost as big a squall from Mrs. Man. Mr. Man stopped Hee-Haw, jumped out of the wagon and ran toward the house.

While he was going to the house, Jocko Monkey was getting out of the wagon a beautiful brown and fluffy ginger cake, all wrapped in a cloth to keep it warm, and nesting down in a basket. "Sorry you can't be at the supper, Hee-Haw," said Jocko, as he darted off through the woods. "So am I, but I am faring mighty well. Tell Blackie Howdy."

Mr. Man got to the house in a hurry, and he got his gun and looked and looked, but he couldn't find anybody. He knew it was an owl, and so he shut up the chicken house, and told Mrs. Man that he would hurry over to Uncle Joe's and be right back. When he got back to the wagon he felt like squalling as loud as Mrs. Man had. The cake was gone. And Hee-Haw began braying—no, he was laughing—oh, how he was laughing!

"That terrible owl or whatever it was that made that noise came and got the cake while I was at the house," Mr. Man told his wife. "Give me half of the other one, and I will take it over to Aunt Judy. We can't disappoint her." Mrs. Man cut off half of the cake and wrapped it up to keep it warm, but she didn't give it to Mr. Man. She got in the wagon and went with him.

Turtle Knew Way Home.

Beaver Dam, Wis. (U.P.).—Warren Burger discredited the stupidity customarily ascribed to turtles after a recent experience with one he had kept as a pet in his basement. Burger found it no longer desirable to keep the turtle and carried it more than half a mile away to a creek. The next morning he found it outside the basement door, waiting to be let in and fed.

The President's Opportunity.

Undoubtedly there is more than mere coincidence in the fact that a barrage of dignified protests regarding uncertainties of the New Deal has been laid down subsequent to the announcement that President Roosevelt will shortly deliver another "accounting" of his policy over the radio. Organized business, which is all but importuning the President to take notice of its various apprehensions, is fully cognizant of the vital opportunity for reassurance which the projected public address will give.

Those who follow the trend of events closely have not failed to observe that the anxieties of business, confirmed by incontestable statistical data, have been increasing since the Green Bay speech delivered by the President on his way back from Hawaii. High Administration officials have on various occasions since then sought to discount the unfortunate impression that the President is inclined to regard recovery as secondary to reform. The statements of these officials were doubtless authorized. But obviously assurances on issues at least partly responsible for lack of confidence would come with far greater force and helpfulness from the President himself.

Some public statement is called for by the resignation of Gen. Johnson and the reorganization of NRA which that implies. It can readily be made the occasion for an outline of intentions which will greatly promote recovery without in any way subordinating desirable reforms. Few such reforms, indeed, are possible as permanencies without recovery.

Reassurances to business can not be as explicit as some of its leaders seem to wish. Nor is such a degree of definite information necessary. None wish to contract the latitude which every framer of policy must possess in an emergency period. Assurance that this latitude does not involve indifference to fundamental recovery needs would be sufficient to mark a real improvement.

Political Extortion.

The current attempt of politicians to levy a tax upon Government employes to pay off the debt of the Democratic party is more brazen than surprising. Even beyond most, the present Administration has distributed jobs as rewards to the "faithful." It seems entirely natural to party leaders to demand a definite percentage of the remuneration from such jobs to replenish their political war chests.

Civil Service as well as patronage employes are being solicited, presumably on the theory that they retain their jobs through the courtesy of politicians. Of course, the law exempts all Federal employes from any obligation to contribute to political funds. But the law has not prevented implied threats against the security of the jobs of noncontributors.

Such debauchery of the Government service is the more offensive when attempts are being made to establish a "planned economy," for which a Civil Service completely independent of politics would seem the first prerequisite. In this case, the attempt to exploit Federal employes is so flagrant as to call forth a formal statement from Secretary Wallace. He deserves commendation for reminding employes in the Agriculture Department of their legal rights. But his words carry no assurance that subordinates of less integrity will not discriminate against noncontributors.

In his address at Yale University a few months ago President Roosevelt said that he did not know the political affiliations of many officials in Washington. That blissful ignorance is not shared by Postmaster General Farley and his efficient coterie of political engineers. They know, and act upon their knowledge.

Qualified Optimism.

Political statisticians point out that there will be numerous changes in the Congressional line-up this year. Even though election day is still six weeks away, it is certain that there will be at least 69 new faces in the House and five in the Senate. Doubtless the turnover will be still more extensive on election day.

From the viewpoint of efficient organization and smooth functioning of the legislative mechanism, it is well to retain experienced and competent members of the House. In a body so unwieldy the importance of officers who "know the ropes" can scarcely be overemphasized. Nevertheless, the record of the last Congress was such that a heavy turnover in personnel would arouse few regrets.

Before waxing enthusiastic over this prospect, however, it is well to tune-in on some of the demagogy, the quack remedies and the eloquent appeals for more Federal cash, which are now bringing candidates to the front. These are days of rapid transitions in politics. The landslide of 1932 is being superseded by isolated avalanches in many States, with mere rabble-rousing crusaders too frequently on top.

In short, hats shouldn't be thrown too high until the new Congress can be appraised in operation.

Central Bank Discussions.

Warnings of a general nature to the effect that the American system of private banking is in danger, and may be superseded by nationalization of the banks, have assumed more definite shape of late through discussion of proposals for a central bank for industry.

The alarm aroused by these suggestions would be difficult to understand if banking nationalization meant merely substitution of one central bank for the twelve regional banks now in existence. Objections to the change would be strong, but, after all, central banks are the rule rather than the exception in most parts of the world. Moreover, what is in many respects the strongest central bank in existence—the Bank of England—is still private in character. It is evident, therefore, that more than a change in the machinery of banking is anticipated by those who decry establishment of a central institution under Government control.

What opponents of the central bank idea fear is that the new institution would become a means of socializing credit in ways that would prove disastrous to the country. As one financial writer says: "It is not an issue between regional banks and a central bank, or between regional banks and a 'monetary authority.' It is an issue of political control versus nonpolitical control."

In other words, opposition centers on any move intended to put the Government in full possession of the credit resources of the country. For such a development there would be precedents. In Soviet Russia the government officials as a matter of course determine the apportionment of credits among state owned and operated industries. In that case the banking system is adapted to the form of economic society under which the Russian people live. Indeed, it is impossible to conceive of a planned industrial system of a communistic type financed by an independent banking system.

On the other hand, the establishment of a completely nationalized banking system in the United States would be diametrically opposed to a system of production and distribution based upon private ownership and control of industry. Under such conditions something would have to give way. As James Warburg pointed out recently in a public address, Government control of credit is simply not compatible with personal freedom and with the maintenance of democratic institutions.

Discussion of central bank plans is still in a very nebulous stage. Conjectures as to the probable relation of such a bank to the individual banks of the country, and the extent of the powers that it would directly exercise, are pure guesswork. Furthermore, it is reported that the Administration is opposed to the entire idea of a central bank. Nevertheless, the discussion serves a healthy purpose. It has aroused a certain section of the public to a realization of the evils of political banking and the necessity of the most careful analysis before any indorsement is given to revolutionary changes in the relation of the Government to the private banking system.

Already the independence of the Reserve system has become little more than a name, and the Government itself has, as a result of emergency conditions, extended its own banking activities and its control over banking in ways unprecedented. The heavy public borrowing program and the certainty that deficit financing will continue for an indefinite period increase fears of even greater political domination of the banking system. Such domination could, of course, be used to overcome banking resistance to further expansion of excessively large holdings of Government securities.

Unification of the banking systems of the country is greatly needed. Effective Governmental supervision is also essential. That is a program of reform that would strengthen the banks and make them more independent of Government aid. Establishment of a central bank of the type under discussion, however, might result in the annihilation of the system of private banking and the conversion of the banks into mere financing agencies of the Government.

Fruits Of Demagogy.

Legislative control of the cotton crop met with vigorous opposition from the Department of Agriculture when the Bankhead bill was under discussion last spring. Secretary Wallace observed that the South overwhelmingly approved the measure, but would lose some of its enthusiasm after trying it out. Congress ignored the advice of the Secretary and his aids. The bill was enacted in response to a clamor from people who gave little heed to its probable consequences.

It is ironical indeed that the very legislators who drew up this measure and railroaded it through Congress should now seek to bring about its suspension. Farmers growing small quantities of cotton, it is said, are subjected to gross injustices under the Bankhead act. That is one of the fundamental objections raised against the bill when it was under consideration. But impetuous members of Congress from the cotton States brushed it aside. Critics of the measure were denounced as obstructionists and reactionaries.

Secretary Wallace has promised alleviation of inequities through allotment of reserve certificates permitting the so-called small farmer to sell his cotton tax free. But it is obvious that the act could not be suspended without causing more injustice than now exists. It would be a farce indeed if farmers who curtailed their acreage and suffered further reductions from the drought should be required to relinquish their tax-exemption certificates for the benefit of farmers who did not curtail and whose crops were not affected by dry weather. Having overwhelmingly indorsed the idea of a strait-jacket for the cotton-growing industry, farmers with surplus crops certainly ought to have the sportsmanship to endure the unpleasant results until intelligent readjustments can be effected.

The most serious aspect of the whole situation, however, was apparently ignored at Saturday's conference. American cotton dealers are expanding their facilities for handling foreign growths because of their assumption that the supremacy of the United States in the cotton export trade is jeopardized. Cotton exports this season are less than half what they were last year. The American output having been sharply reduced by legislative fiat, plus drought, foreign production is expected to exceed the domestic crop by 4,394,000 bales. For the first time since the Civil War cotton producers in other countries have taken a commanding lead in this vital industry. Controversies over the adjustment of State quotas dwindle into insignificance in comparison to this now unquestioned tendency toward the replacement of American cotton in the world market.

On The Clydebank.

Today is to be a red-letter day in the lives of the British Board of Trade and the Royal Family.

Barring some unforeseen disaster, such as too much mud in the Clyde, the largest liner ever built in Britain will become the largest liner afloat. Before nightfall, too, a palpitating British public will know the name bestowed upon her by Queen Mary to replace the number, 534, by which the vessel has unromantically been designated in her progress from the draughting board to the ship channel of the Clyde. And perhaps by then the huge crowd that will gather for the launching will have heard the tremulous voice of John Masefield recite the verses which, as poet laureate, he has written for the occasion.

Pity the poor poet laureate! Since the reign of Henry III, England has generally boasted a Versificator Regis. Chaucer held the post, as did Southey, Scott, Wordsworth, and Tennyson, in the nineteenth century, and Robert Bridges and Masefield in our own. Each, undoubtedly, more than once has felt the applicability of Browning's lines on "The Lost Leader"—for to be a laureate, as Kipling knew too well, means sacrifice of freedom. It is doubtful if a king ever told a laureate exactly what to sing or how to sing it. But still the oppressive feeling of royal restraint must forever weigh upon the laureate's spirit.

To sing upon the great occasions of state, to celebrate the virtues of a nation, is not always the inspiration that a poet needs. This is why that old lover of sails and real ships, Masefield, must have sighed when he heard that his country was determined to lead the race for traveling palm gardens and peacock alleys. For he must sing, and his heart must have been heavy. But he rose to the occasion and wrote nobly of this "rampart of a ship":

Long as a street and lofty as a tower,
And sheer the sea with majesty and power.

In the final stanza of his verse, however, there seems to reside the utmost of the emotion of this old man of the sea, now resting on his glory as a poet who once wrought the glamour and the tragedy of the deep and its folk into fine and simple words. It is the universal hope of all who have ever seen a vessel, whether steam or sail, slide down the timbered ways. And one phrase is particularly fitting in the light of a recent happening that must be in the minds of all who will stand today on the Clydebank:

May shipwreck and collision, fog and fire,
Rock, shoal and other evils of the sea,
Be kept from you. * * *

Avoiding A Bad Example.

None of the twelve questions which the National Association of Manufacturers has addressed to candidates for Congress attempts to learn their views on a specific legislative proposal or plan.

It may be that criticism of other questionnaires which have sought to hamstring the deliberative function of Congress has made the manufacturers cautious in this respect. In any case, they have shown a wise restraint in asking no questions that would commit candidates in advance to a definite proposal, or otherwise hamper their freedom of action if elected. As the president of the association says, "this sort of domination by maneuvered minorities is un-American and unwholesome in a democracy."

At the same time, it is in the best tradition of democracy for voluntary associations, of labor, of capital, or of other interests, to ask those who solicit their votes to set forth clear views on those larger questions of policy and principle that determine the general character and the trend of legislation. Labor, for instance, has an unquestionable right to ask whether a candidate for office is a friend or foe of collective bargaining. The business man is as vitally concerned to know the attitude of a candidate toward government control of business and other matters that affect him personally.

All of the twelve questions that comprise the manufacturers' questionnaire are sufficiently general to be legitimate, and all relate to subjects that an intelligent business man would regard as a test of the candidate's fitness to represent him. The chief defect of the document is that the method of phrasing inquiries clearly reveals the bias of the interrogator.

However, it is difficult to believe that any candidate for office would be hypnotized by the "lead" given him to vote "yes" or "no" as urged. Anyone who has any doubt about the position that the Association of Manufacturers would take on the questions asked is too ignorant to represent any class of citizens or to defend any viewpoint.

Cotton Control.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The scenes are shifting with dazzling rapidity in this country. It was just a few months ago that many wanted to read Senators Bailey and Byrd, of North Carolina and Virginia, respectively, out of the party because they were unwilling to go along with the Tugwells of the Agriculture Department in their crop control and regimentation programs.

Of course, the thinking element of the American people readily knew that Bailey and Byrd had forgotten more of democracy and democratic principles than the Tugwells could hope ever to acquire. But now we see the Senators from Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina in a hot race to Washington to ask Secretary Wallace to undo for them the folly of the Bankhead cotton control bill.

As a measure to enhance the prices of cotton this legislation has thus far been a stark failure. It is not surprising that the Texas Legislature is considering a resolution of appeal to the Department of Justice to contest the constitutionality of the Bankhead cotton control act, asserting that for every acre withdrawn from cultivation here one had been added elsewhere. But farmers, like the rest of us, will give only scant consideration to the advice of those who have the temerity to advise them contrary to their wishes. Most men in public life do not have that courage. North Carolina and Virginia are indeed fortunate in having Senators who will not stutify themselves by following along with the crowd. Bailey and Byrd may go wrong. They are not infallible. However, it is pretty well established now that they have convictions of their own which they will not compromise for political advantage. Such men the American people will eventually gladly follow.

Rent and Taxes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apropos of the textile strike, it is interesting to note that, according to Government reports (1898), 106 times as many yards of unbleached sheeting were produced in 1897 as were produced by the same unit of human effort in 1860. There has doubtless been an even greater improvement in labor-saving machinery during the past 37 years.

A natural result of this economy should, of course, have been expressed in the double advantage of greatly increased wages to the producer and much lower prices to the consumer; but it will be found upon investigation that wages have not risen above the bare cost of living and that prices have scarcely been lowered at all. Further investigation will develop the fact that land values have increased at an astonishing ratio and that taxes upon business, commerce and agriculture have been multiplied to a degree that is very close to annihilation.

Of course, the situation has been brought to a crisis by two additional factors: (1) the cost of the great war, including repudiated loans to foreign nations, and (2) the extravagance of the National Government at Washington. But the important fact to be gained by an analysis of the problem is that the Government is daily surrendering a major portion of its natural revenue, ground rent, to individuals and corporations and is in consequence forced to place constantly increasing burdens upon business, commerce and agriculture.

Two things should be done, and must be done simultaneously: (1) Repeal, slowly but surely, the present crushing burden of taxation; (2) appropriate gradually, in increasing ratio, the Government's legitimate ground rent, which is demonstrably the rightful property of no individual. If democracy is to be preserved and socialism to be avoided, we must adopt this program.

Captive Lions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Richmond, Va., reporter who wrote the account of the circus lion's escape from the parade held there September 19 and his ultimate death, did a good job even though he breathed not a word of sympathy for the poor beast. But, then, reporters are supposed to make accounts interesting and amusing, not necessarily sympathetic, especially where certain classes of animals are concerned.

For my part and voicing the sentiment of hundreds of progressive humanitarians, I wish that every circus lion in existence and all their other animal fellow prisoners were dead, though not killed in the long drawn-out-bullet-riddled manner of poor "Gilbert." I wish that some good fairy with a magic wand might bring them, at least the release of speedy death from their enforced performances and life imprisonment if not, of course, a return to their native homes and freedom. It is cowardly enough for mankind to steal wild animals from their far-away jungle and mountain homes to subject them to the miseries of transportation over seas and land and in closed crates and then to confine them to life imprisonment in our zoos. But, upon circus animals we add "insult to injury" when we not only take away their freedom but outrage their sensibilities by seeking to humble their wild spirit to submit to "superior" man's silly amusement stunts.

Can a few hours daily amusement for changing curious crowds, spending time so unworthily, possibly warrant the life imprisonment and torture to minds and bodies of thousands of highly sentient creatures harassed by day by their trainers and tortured by night in their narrow prison cages with unutterable longing for blessed freedom? For freedom is the dearest possession of earth's creatures, and man is defying God Almighty in robbing them of His gift.

The Traffic Puzzle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your recent editorial, "Fruits of Careless Planning," should have read "Fruits of Indifferent Planning," as Congress was well warned of the traffic, natural and military dangers involved in placing its Governmental outfit across the city from where most of the employes live, in a low region subjected to flooding and where a poor aerial marksman was bound to hit one building if he missed another, in the event of international unpleasantness.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission should have distributed the buildings a mile apart, on higher ground, where the workers could have reached their work in all kinds of weather, in a few minutes, instead of using two hours a day in being transported. Now comes the worst of all—a suggestion to build a subway under the Ellipse, where thousands of employes can gather after a day's work to be drowned like rats in the event of a heavy rain such as we recently experienced.

The great trouble in this Capital City planning and building business is that everything is done for looks rather than for convenience. Moreover, it is mostly half done or half finished when the money or enthusiasm runs out.

I have come to the conclusion that the only solution of the transport business is to have a huge fleet of buses plying along Constitution avenue and turning up every intersecting street. The parks set aside for the pleasure of the public by George Washington and his friends should not be used as building and parking spaces. The auto has really hogged enough of the open spaces already, although the bulk of the workers still walk to work.

If a subway is built, furnish plenty of life preservers.

On Tourist Camps.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was with interest that I read in The Post of September 16 an article, under the signature of Robert De Vore, describing the Colony on wheels, located somewhere in Alexandria.

It is all too true, unfortunately, that a very large number of this floating population are tourists who have been forced, through adversity, to abandon such homes as they may have had, and, with the lure of warmer climates and resultant reduction of living costs, have become "tenters."

Then, too, there is another class, medium, well-to-do persons who have learned what real comfort in traveling consists of, and who have purchased delightfully comfortable and convenient "trailers." In these they start on their vacations.

You will also find a third class, very much in the minority, consisting of more elderly people, as a rule, who have retired from active business life.

During extensive traveling I have located in camps of every description. Bearing this in mind, I heartily subscribe to the general feeling of resentment regarding the management and conditions existing in the Washington Tourist Camp, which is the most ideally situated of any I have ever visited. It is noted for some of the most elaborate equipment ever found in such camps. Unfortunately, grounds receive no attention; there is absolutely no drainage, and only one short line where electricity may be obtained.

The fees at the Washington Tourist Camp are higher than in any other I have visited. Judging by the employes of privately owned camps, there are enough employes in this came to operate six ordinary camps of this type.

Then, too, there is the ruling prohibiting anyone remaining in the camp more than two weeks, regardless of the fact that perhaps only 1 space in 50 may be occupied.

Regardless of the usual argument of the Hotel Men's Association, those many thousands who travel as herein described actually will never allow themselves to be forced into hotels, and they all spend a goodly sum of money in whatever town or city they are located, and certainly these dollars find their way, by devious routes, into the bank accounts of the citizens of every town or city. It appears that local conditions might well be looked into.

Dog Talk

A Hamburg scientist has announced the result of a recent experiment which should be of interest to all who ever owned or loved a dog. Dr. Emmanuel Sarris, of the Institute for Environmental Research, declares that dogs "learn the meaning of certain words very well and are not fooled by similar words." Several dogs were used, named variously, Paris Haris, Aris, &c.; yet, says the Hamburg dispatch, "they learned to respond to their names perfectly."

It is likely that Dr. Sarris experiments with dogs of a breed known variously as German shepherd, German police, Belgian police and Alsatian, a breed which is peculiarly adapted to work requiring quick intelligence. Moreover, the experiments were carried on indoors, where tonal qualities are more readily distinguished. For, as everyone who has ever had any experience with sporting breeds knows dogs do have a certain amount of difficulty in distinguishing similar vowel sounds.

The hound books of Maryland and Virginia hunt clubs would reveal such names as Melodious, Bounce, Bluebell, Logan, Cherokee, Scotsman, Sheriff, Ringwood, Dashwood, Frolicsome, Fancy, Julie. Couples bearing such antiphonal names as Buckshot and Powder, Bugler and Drummer, Nip and Tuck, are sometimes found; and there is an interesting instance of a bitch named Music and her three puppies—Do, Re and Mi. The bestowal of such names reflects a certain whimsey on the part of the huntsman, but their practical use while hounds are working in a covert or going to or from a meet is of first importance.

The Post Impressionist

Rumblings From Statuary Hall.

Postoffice, Wednesday.

"I FEEL a draft," said Senator Zebulon B. Vance, "a distinct draft."

"It's coming from that door," Andrew Jackson corroborated. "I suppose that infernal guard has left it open again."

"I'll shut it," volunteered Robert M. La Follette, starting to rise, but getting no farther than the edge of his chair.

"You're always going to do things," snorted Representative Curry, of Alabama; "that's the trouble with Progressives. They're always full of suggestions, but they never get any farther than sitting on the edge of their seats, looking like nervous bloodhounds."

"I won't stand for any aspersions on my party," roared La Follette. "After all, we're supposed to forget politics in our celestial spheres."

"Fat chance!" mourned Senator James Shields; "there's very few of us would be here if we hadn't been in politics."

"Sir, I challenge that statement," said Roger Williams, the Puritan minister.

"Well, just why are you here?" questioned Shields.

"For goodness sake!" exclaimed Williams.

"Whew, this has been a busy day," said Robert Fulton. "I wish the kids that come in here would leave my steamship alone. Children may be all right on valentines and magazine covers, but they're a big bust to me!"

"You're only a big bust yourself," snorted John C. Calhoun.

"Aren't we all?" said the Reverend Muhlenberg, attempting to keep peace at any price.

"None of you have any complaints coming," stated Stephen Austin, of Texas. "Suppose women stopped in front of you and called you cute?"

"Ha, ha, that's a good one," chuckled Garfield. "So they call you cute?"

"How dare you laugh, you . . ."

"The name is Garfield; Mr. President to you," Austin's tormentor said haughtily.

"Boys, boys, let's not fight," interposed Frances E. Willard.

"Those are my sentiments exactly, Miss Willard," said the old war horse, Gen. E. Kirby Smith. "For my part, I've had quite enough fighting to last a lifetime."

"Amen," breathed James P. Clark.

"What do you know about fighting?" asked Gen. Smith in a skeptical tone.

"I served in the Senate from 1903 until my death in 1916," Senator Clark defended himself.

"My error," apologized the general humbly.

Senator Clark was pleased to see that all the other warriors in the Hall were eyeing him with a new respect.

"What's a tunic?" inquired Sam Houston diffidently.

"Remember that anything you say, gentlemen, may be used against you," warned Daniel Webster, who for a minute never let any one forget his legal knowledge.

Sam Houston looked around sheepishly.

"I just wanted to know because two young maidens stopped before me today and one of them said, 'Isn't that tunic he has on just too, too divine?'"

Laughter shook Statuary Hall.

"Pipe down," whispered Charles Carroll; "you'll have the guards back. This is the first time in years that I've set that scroll and pen down. Some of you men have it easy. You just stand around, empty-handed, and I have to hold a mess of brass in each hand."

"What we need," said the progressive La Follette, "is a code of fair competition."

"And NRA hours," shouted John Hanson. "It's no joke to stand here and read the same scroll 24 hours a day. Can't even take my hat off and rest my head."

John Ingalls, of Kansas, took the floor.

"We should demand justice," asserted that fiery statesman. "The Government has just spent thousands of dollars on a garage for Senators' cars, and here we are, crowded in like sardines!"

"Thousands of dollars for horseless wagons and not one cent for Presidents," George Washington shouted.

"Gentlemen, this is mutiny!" said the gentle Williams.

The noise subsided. It was not a minute too soon. A guard came in and sleepily looked over the Hall.

"Busts of Lucretia Mott and Susan B. Anthony in marble may fill folks with very noble thoughts, but I still think a crouching Venus now and then would do a lot more for the tourist trade," he murmured.

The guard left and did not notice that his observation had so shocked several of the statues that they had toppled from their pedestals.

As soon as the door was shut Miss Willard rushed over to the fallen men and called out, "Is there a doctor in the house?"

Dr. Crawford Long, of Georgia, stepped forward.

Worth a Good Laugh.

BARGERON

First, there are stories in the papers that another campaign is on to sell the NRA and these are accompanied by pictures of speakers extolling its virtues and of public-spirited women holding up banners urging us to stand by the old Blue Eagle. It is still insisted that we can't have recovery without him. Presumably there will shortly be some more parades with bands and soldiers and chorus girls.

• • • •

Then, reading on further in the paper, we find accounts of what it is these good people are trying to sell. With the NRA trying to settle strikes we find the employes of the organization sending money to support them. When Hugh Johnson, the boss, makes a statement saying the textile workers had gone back on their agreement, a statement not upheld, his employes join with other workers in demanding that he be fired. What a topsy-turvy thing this NRA must be!

The strife and lack of discipline is not confined to the NRA employes, however. We find the higher officials squabbling. It appears that Don Richberg, whom Johnson brought to the NRA thus giving him his place in the sun, has about succeeded in coordinating the chief out of his job.

It is coordination, I am sure, because it is a coordinator that Richberg now is. He was made coordinator back there in midsummer. The coordination apparently has been to coordinate Johnson out.

• • • •

I don't know what the salesmen in this new "sell NRA" campaign are asking for their product, but at most any price it would be a bargain. It could be hung up in the room and every time one felt bad, pessimistic or gloomy, he would only have to study the picture to laugh. He would scream, in fact.

It must be that this is Mr. Roosevelt's way of entertaining the whole country. After all, that was an exclusive party when the guests rolled on the grass in laughter at his mimicry of his critics. We can only imagine what happened and there is not hearty laughter in that.

The effort to sell the NRA again in the light of the comic opera that is taking place is intended, I am sure, to make the whole country laugh. It must be Mr. Roosevelt's humorous presentation to the crowd.

• • • •

No other President I have known would do this. Mr. Coolidge used to have his little jokes and he had the people laughing a lot of the time. We never laughed at anything Mr. Hoover did or said. He was always serious. But Mr. Roosevelt seems to be laughing and making other people laugh nearly all of the time. In the presentation at this time of the NRA he has accomplished a masterpiece. I am inclined to believe that it will go down as the richest bit of humor in a long time. Certainly it is funnier than Mr. Coolidge's hobby horse.

What would be even funnier, of course, would be for the NRA employes not to confine their support of strikes to money but to walk out on a sympathy strike. That would tie up the country, all right. That would definitely check our march toward the more abundant life. It would be the funniest yet.

Misery Drives China Into Ranks of Reds

Farmers, Taxed and Robbed Into Hopeless Debt and Hunger, Flock to Communist Cause; War Lords' Feuds Give It Impetus.

By M. J. Ginsbourg
(Special Correspondent of The Post).

Shanghai, China.

MICHAEL BORODIN, alias Grusenberg, of Chicago, Moscow and Canton, was the spiritual father of the Chinese Communist movement. A few years before him a handful of Chinese intellectuals conducted Communist propaganda under the guise of a literary renaissance movement. Communism, however, made no progress until M. Borodin appeared in Canton as a representative of a Soviet telegraph agency. By 1923, Borodin was already working with Dr. Sun Yat Sen, preparing ground for the Nationalist expedition. The Russian master-propagandist imported Gen. Galens (now known as Gen. Bluecher, chief of the Soviet Far-Eastern army) and a horde of military experts and agitators. Soviet gold and machine guns were poured into south China, a huge army was trained and skillful propagandists were loosened upon the country to foment unrest.

By 1927 all of China south of the Yangtze River was controlled by the Nationalist party and through it by the Communists. From his headquarters in Hankow, Michael Borodin directed a vast web of Communist intrigue covering every province of the country. China was turning Red and consternation reigned in the foreign offices of the great powers. Then, however, M. Borodin made the fatal mistake of ignoring the ambitions of one of his lieutenants, Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, a former Shanghai broker with Napoleonic aspirations.

Gen. Chiang suddenly left Hankow for Shanghai and, with the support of Chinese capitalists, terrified by the menace of Sovietism, organized an anti-Communist crusade. Communists were jailed en masse, and Michael Borodin, with his retinue, had to escape across the treacherous Mongolian steppes. The Kuomintang, the Chinese Nationalist party, underwent a process of "purification," and the Communist movement went underground.

Communist Movement, However, Goes Forward.

SINCE then the Communist movement has met with varying fortunes, but on the whole it has been eminently successful. Only recently this was demonstrated by the Communist sortie into the province of Fukien, an escapade which created a near-panic in Shanghai and Nanking. It seems that while the government forces were making merry in Kiangsi, well-armed bands numbering about 10,000 crossed the border into Fukien and suddenly appeared within a few miles of Foochow. For a few days the situation looked critical, and several Japanese warships were dispatched to Foochow, close to Japanese Formosa. Many small towns and villages were reported captured by the Red bands, one of which, incidentally, was led by the sister of Ho Lung, a famous Communist general.

If the Oriental Amazon was not a creation of a sensationally inclined reporter, she must have been just as vicious as she was efficient. Chinese press dispatches managed to slip past the censors' scissors the news that the government troops had a thousand casualties in one of the engagements. The whole affair was extremely distasteful to the Nanking government, as it came almost simultaneously with the annual announcement of total annihiliation of Communists in the province of Kiangsi!

The trouble in Fukien, however, was one of the least important demonstrations of the Communist strength. At least four provinces with a population of almost 60,000,000 are dominated today by Chinese Soviets, while at least six others, with a population of close to 150,000,000, have exceedingly powerful Communist movements. Some of China's largest provinces, Kiangsi and Shangtung, Szechuan and Hunan, are thickly dotted with the red of the village Soviets. And despite the annual punitive expeditions, with German-trained armies and American made bombers, the Communists continue to thrive.

Collapse of Rural China Advances Red Movement.

THE main reason for the Communists' success is the utter collapse of rural China. Disastrous floods and droughts, locusts and bandits, heavy taxes and the endless wars between the petty warlords have reduced the farmer to the state of almost unbelievable misery.

Of China's 360,000,000 farmers, almost 200,000,000 own no land. Sixty-eight per cent of the population own or till only 19 per cent of the total land, while absentee landlords own 43 per cent. The rents are exorbitant, more than half of the returns going to the landlords. According to the International Famine Relief Commission, three-fourths of farm families receive an annual income of less than $70, but their expenditures amount to $228. In terms of human misery this means that only a fourth of the population makes ends meet. Those who are forced to borrow pay interest rates ranging from 30 to 100 per cent a year.

Economic woes, such as the high rents, low incomes and excessive taxes (in the province of Szechuan, for instance, they have been collected up to the year 1996!) form only a part of farmers' troubles. Natural calamities, between 1928 and 1931, affected on average a third of China. This year, according to a report published here recently, two-thirds of the country has been affected, with losses totaling $1,000,000,000. Yet this does not include the areas now being inundated by the Yellow River.

Soldiers and bandits also exact their toll. China's more or less regular soldiery numbers approximately 2,500,000. In addition there is probably an equal number of bandits and Communists. The people find the hand of law just as oppressive as the depredations of the lawless. Not long ago a Chinese newspaper told a story of a small town of Lien Hua, the magistrate of which was ordered by the Anti-Red Headquarters to collect a "contribution" of $1 per capita for military road-building. The people fled from their homes, leaving notices: "This is the house of So and So, a distressed refugee. May the National army spare it from tearing down for work materials. With gratitude."

Misery Provides Fertile Soil for Communism.

WITH such conditions the Communists find fertile soil for their propaganda. They come to the impoverished tenant-farmers and offer them free land and relief from taxation and the tuchuns' tyranny. In the areas where local soviets are functioning, all non-peasant lands have been confiscated and redistributed among the peasants, and all taxes abolished in favor of a single graduated tax on farm products. In addition, all former records of deeds and leases have been destroyed and boundary landmarks removed. This measure created a huge vested interest genuinely concerned in the preservation of the Communist regime.

The Chinese Communist party, unlike its Russian progenitor, does not advocate the abolition of private property, but merely its redistribution among the propertyless. The Communist platform also advocates the enforcement of the eight-hour day, increase in wages, introduction of social insurance, improvement in the soldiers' living conditions and relentless war upon the central government and the "imperialist" powers.

Even the authorities have been forced to admit that the Communists, by virtue of their program or their ruthlessness, have won the peasants' support. A veteran-general of a Kiagsi anti-Red expedition complained that the farmers supplied the Communist forces with information on the regular troops, refused to give assistance to the soldiers, and at times even attacked them. This passive or active opposition has nullified the efforts of an army of 300,000 for the last two years.

On the other hand the Soviet armies have been enjoying a phenomenal growth. Thus, one Fang left Nanchang for Kiangsi in 1927 with only seven rifles. Three years later he had an army of 12,000 with 3,000 rifles. Chu Teh, a very prominent Communist leader, progressed from 200 to 300 rifles in 1927 to an army of over 50,000 armed men a few months ago. Today the Communists claim a million men under arms.

The Communist movement remains one of the most serious problems facing the Nanking government. Gen. Chiang Kai-shek has given it his undivided attention, even transferring his residence to Kuling, Kiangsi, where he can personally direct the anti-Red campaign. His task of clearing the region of Soviets has been hampered by several factors. It is reported that his troops are reluctant to fight because they have been paid, a rare incident in the annals of Chinese warfare.

On the other hand, at least one petty warlord discontinued his anti-Communist operations because of the shortage of funds and noncooperation on the part of rival warlords. Despite Gen. Chiang's orders, various civil and military governments persist in levying exorbitant taxes, thus driving the peasants into the hands of the reds. Most of the central provinces are facing a famine this year, and hundreds of thousands of starving farmers join the "big parade" to the more fortunate areas. The surviving refugees receive little assistance from the authorities, and there are occasional reports of rice riots. These famished mobs often are led by the Communists.

Finally, other semi-independent warlords refuse to cooperate with Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. Thus, the Cantonese warlord, Chien Chi-tang, delays his attack on the Communist forces in western Fukien, obviously desiring to retain a buffer state between his domain and the Nankin territory. Some observers believe that Canton and the Communist forces have reached an agreement whereby the Communists receive immunity in exchange for refraining from their activities in Canton. True or not, this rumor illustrates the various ways of Chinese internal politics.

Meanwhile, the farmers, suffering from droughts, floods, high taxes, bandits and warlords, fall ready prey to Communist propaganda.

A Mr. Paine and a Mr. Hoyt are now members of the Rainbow's aftguard and it would probably be the last straw if the challenger discovered the American yacht had anybody aboard named Suffern.

After all, is the British boat racing a yacht or a merger?

No End of Books

Novels Are as Novels Do.

Readers in whom our genial Post Impressionist has aroused a curiosity toward Pennsylvania Dutch customs and talk, or who have the taste in their own right, will take to Thames Williamson's "D is for Dutch" (Harcourt Brace, $2), like a calf to clover.

THEO. HALL.

It is the kind of a tale which could pass muster for a good dinner — hearty, homely, and satisfying. Yet behind the figure of old Herman Bauer, farmer, hex doctor, and solid man of the neighborhood, there lurks a conflict which lifts the story from the plain bucolic. Mr. Williamson, whose "Hunky" and "Wood's Colt" and other novels have made him one of our most estimable writers of regional literature, does his usual thorough job on the theme—

"D is for Dutch, solid and level, Talking God, tempting the devil."

• • • •

Very few novels indeed have given us so remarkable magical and nostalgic a view of the inside of the kingdom of childhood as does "Dew on the Grass," by Elluned Lewis (Macmillan, $2). Obviously, you must shed a number of years and their incrustations before you can enter there. But once in, once on terms with the four Gwyn children and their friends in their English home, you are likely to thank the author for the very reason which Charles Morgan, of "The Fountain" fame, so well expressed—"You have," he said, "set a candle in my memory."

• • • •

The last work from the pen of Eugene Manlove Rhodes is "Beyond the Desert" (Houghton Mifflin, $2). Part Wild West romance, part history (the drought and panic of 1893) it is fused into stirring dramatic action as only Rhodes could do it. No one, positively no one, has written better Westerns.

• • • •

There are still changes to be rung on the farm theme. E. W. Lovell's "Legacy" (Norton, $2.50) treats of Wisconsin life one generation after Glenway Wescott's "The Grandmothers"—and of a section of Wisconsin whose blood is drawn from the French Voyageurs. You will find the Pelletier family engrossingly real and understandable, their story a rich and earthy tale, excellently compounded.

• • • •

Almost too ambitious to be compassed is Stuart Hawkins' plan for "No Man Is Single" (Houghton Mifflin, $2.50). Aspen Trumbull has just died of a fall. To his funeral come his father, Banks Trumbull; his wife, Helen, and his French cousin, Helene Dammartin Mercer. While the service goes on, each one dreams of the dead man as he or she knew him—and here we have the narrative. Then a page or two after they leave the church ties it all up. They have been remembering, it seems in all reality, three different men.

And yet, to write a novel giving three fully realized aspects of one man, does not seem to tax the resources of Mr. Hawkins. He has done a sound and thoughtful piece of work.

• • • •

Hugh Edwards' "Crack of Doom" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2) jumps gayly, with the scene the West Indies, from the time of Morgan the pirate down to our own. Fate was hard on the Strutton and Clennell families—there would be a chance of romantic happiness, put very prettily by Mr. Edwards, and then down would come lava or earthquake upon them like the crack of doom. Light, and full of sweet spices.

• • • •

Violet Campbell's "Seed of Adam" (Dutton, $2.50) gets pretty worked up about high life in England. A dignified judge, his gracious wife, and two giddy daughters keep the plot stirring. I thought it rather hysteric, and inclined to go soft.

• • • •

Because Mark Selden comes from the Fighting Seldens, he wants to make good in the hardest country he can find. That's Labrador. And when he goes there, his lovely sister has to go in to get him out. "Man Lost," by Arthur Stringer (Bobbs-Merrill, $2), is top-notch on the magazine serial level.

• • • •

Far more substantial is Maud and Delos Lovelace's "One Stayed to Welcome" (John Day, $2.50), a ripely conceived and historically integrated tale of frontier days in Minnesota. The plot is banal (two friends in love with the same girl), but the tint and shading of the scenes will stay long in your memory.

• • • •

I had a good deal to say yesterday in praise of Walter Greenwood's "Love on the Dole." With only an ounce or two less of enthusiasm, I want to recommend James Landsdale Hodson's "Harvest of the North" (Knopf, $2.50).

It holds the same objective eye on modern England's industrial life, this time the cotton-mill workers of Lancashire. From the heights of the 1919 cotton boom to the bottom of the crash we follow the fortunes of a great array of characters. This novel does not have the concentration of "Love on the Dole," but it has all the truth.

Rules Handicap Honest Men if a Cheat Plays

By Robert Quillen

It is probable that primitive man had no law except the law of the jungle: Let him take who can.

Some of the laws made by civilized men are unnecessary and unwise, but experience has shown that certain fundamental rules are necessary for the protection of natural rights. These are the rules of the game of life.

No game, whether mumblepeg or bridge, can continue to exist without rules that are agreed upon and obeyed.

If one player cannot win while obeying the rules, and becomes a cheat, all other players must turn against him. Cheating gives him an advantage that is not to be tolerated.

Other players could even matters by cheating in their turn, but the result would be chaos. The game would be finished.

A young educator who spent months as one of America's boy and girl tramps, sharing their stolen vegetables and roast pig, quotes them as saying: "It ain't stealin' if you're hungry."

They do not consider themselves members of Dillinger's class. In fact, many of them—including a man now prominent in Hollywood—boast of their resourceful boldness.

Some years ago, well-fed honest men scorned the tenant farmer who felt no obligation to pay debts when Providence denied him a good crop. Now solemn statesmen reason in the same manner, and the citizens of a debtor nation say to their creditors: "Why should we deny ourselves to provide money for you?"

The reign of rules is finished unless the cheats are discouraged quickly.

We can't permit one player to steal. It gives him too much advantage over those who abide by the rules.

Suppose we all should begin to steal. Who could stop us? The law would be helpless and civilization would go down in red ruin within a week.

There isn't much choice, or long to make it. We can have a secure civilization or we can have rule-breaking cheats, but we can't have both.

Safety Campaign Poster Is Banned

School Head Reports It Offensive Caricature.

Officials of public schools for colored children yesterday posted an order from Assistant Supt. Garnet C. Wilkinson forbidding exhibition in classrooms of an American Automobile Association poster, a part of that organization's safety campaign. The poster displayed a colored man and a mule in argument. The Wilkinson order stated:

"Attention of this office has been directed to a poster under title of 'Don't Be Stubborn,' recently distributed among schools of the District of Columbia by the American Automobile Association in connection with their safety campaign.

"In the judgment of this office this poster is a caricature which is offensive to the Negro.

"Accordingly, this office instructs you to withdraw all such posters from circulation in your building. Please see that this action is taken at once."

Daily Talk About Books and Authors

As Right as Rain.

I don't know who first used the expression "as right as rain," but I will wager he was British. The British people love rain and they feel there is something unclean about sultry heat. Not because it makes for extreme sweat but unclean anyhow. Many of them regard central heating, with a furnace, as somehow obscene; and at all events unhealthy, not quite sound morally. What they seem to like best in winter is the combination of an open fire and an open window, with a temperature of about 55 degrees. When the thermometer, outdoors or in, gets above 65, they feel that they are being suffocated.

They never seem to catch cold because of being wet. They never wear overshoes although an umbrella is with many of them an inseparable companion. Yet they will often use it as a cane, even when it is raining hard, for they like to feel the rain in their faces—it seems wholesome.

Thus when you talk about a climate with continual sunshine, they regard that as anything but desirable. The late John Galsworthy was forced to seek a warmer and dryer climate than England in the winter time; so he and Mrs. Galsworthy went to Arizona and other places in our Southwestern States. There he would sit outdoors, writing novels in the sunshine; yet he was often homesick for clouds and rain. I felt sure of this, but could not prove it till today; when a little volume called "The Collected Poems of John Galsworthy" has just landed on my desk. He meant every word of this poem.

Desert Song.

As I came on from Sante Fe,
The desert road by night and day,
The desert wilds ran far and free
Beneath the wind of desert sea,
But—ah! my heart!—to know again
The scent of rain, the scent of rain!

And I'd in fancy scale the air
Beyond those yellow mountains bare,
And so with dizzy birds survey
A thousand miles of shining day,
And I would glean the gold of sun
And mark his curving glory run
Its fiery course, and eager turn
My cheek and pallid brow to burn,
But—oh! my heart!—to feel again
The wet of rain, the wet of rain!

And wakeful all the night I'd lie
And watch the dark infinity,
And count the stars that wheel and spin,
And drink the frosty ether in;
And I would hear the desert song
That silence brings the whole night long,
And day by day the whisper pass
Of parching heat through desert grass,
But oh! my heart!—to hear again
The drip of rain! the drip of rain!

When I rode on from Santa Fe,
That desert road by night and day,
There came at last a little sigh,
A puff of white across the sky,
And—ah my heart!—I knew again

Takoma Park Liquor Permit Hearing Today

Battle Over Licenses May Be Carried to Courts; 4 Applications Up.

The District Alcoholic Beverage Board will launch hearings at 10:30 a. m. today on applications for liquor licenses in Takoma Park, D. C. Both sides to the controversy over liquor licenses threaten appeal to the courts should the decision go against them.

Hearings were fixed by the board several days ago. Decision to carry forward the program was reached by the board when the District Commissioners told them to go ahead. Instructions from the commissioners came on the heels of a protest against the hearings filed on Monday by the Citizens Association of Takoma Park, D. C. The petition was filed by W. C. Magathan, president of the association.

"I am directed by the commissioners to inform you," Daniel E. Garges, secretary to the board of commissioners wrote the ABC board yesterday, "that the previous instructions issued your board to consider each of these cases on their merits is hereby reiterated and confirmed."

Referendum Appeal Urged.

Decision of the Commissioners was reached at a conference in which the whole situation was briefly reviewed. Commissioner George E. Allen, sponsor of the referendum which was stopped by the decision of Justice F. Dickinson Letts, of the District Supreme Court, urged that the temporary restraining order issued by Letts the day before the referendum was to have been held, should be pushed to a conclusion in the courts.

Allen's plea, however, failed to persuade Melvin C. Hazen and Col. Daniel I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner. Demand that the Commissioners set aside the Takoma Park district as a dry area was objected to by Commissioner Allen. The divided board fell back on its previous instructions to the A. B. C. board.

The hearing before the A. B. C. board today is expected to revolve about the question, What is a neighborhood?

Under the liquor law the beverage board will consider the character of the premises for which a liquor-selling license is sought; the surroundings of the premises, and the wishes of persons residing or owning property in the neighborhood.

Law Heeds Objections.

Another paragraph of the same section of the law permits the beverage board from issuing a license for a premises where a majority of the owners of property within a radius of 600 feet object.

The ABC board has before it hundreds of petitions filed by both wets and drys. Analysis of the signatures, made by the board, shows that 1,092 voted against any kind of licenses; that 840 voted for some kind of license; that 1,092 voted against a "hard" liquor license; that only 463 voted for a "hard" liquor license.

William E. Leahy, representing license seekers, and George E. Sullivan, representing the drys, are to be the principal arguers at the hearing today. It was Mr. Leahy, representing applicants, who argued Justice Letts into issuing the restraining order which killed the referendum.

Four Applications Pending.

Four applications for licenses are pending before the beverage board. John N. Ballos, who conducts a restaurant at 317 Cedar street, wants a retailer's class D license. This would permit on-sale of beer and light wines, but not "hard" liquors.

James Bernard Simpson, operating Simpson's Market as Simpson & Son, wants a retailer's class B license, which would permit off-sale of beer and light wine.

Martin S. McLain wants a retailer's class D license for 324 Cedar street. This would permit on-sale of beer and light wines.

Daniel Joseph Mattingly, trading as Mattingly Bros., at 347 Cedar street, wants a retailer's class A license. This would permit off-sale of "hard" and other liquors. It is a drug store.

Roberts Inquest Set October 8

Six Others Hurt in Fatal Crash in Maryland.

An inquest into the death of Hugh N. Roberts, 18, of Berwyn, Md., will be held October 8, at Berwyn.

Six other persons were injured in the auto accident that took Roberts' life early yesterday on the Baltimore boulevard.

With Roberts was Harry McNamee, 32, of Hyattsville, whom police described as driver; "Billie" Powell, 22, Log Cabin, Md., and Lyle Taylor, 20, of Branchville, Md. They were said to be in a serious condition.

The McNamee car is alleged to have been in collision with a car operated by J. S. Blair, 29, a Fort Meade soldier. Blair was held by Hyattsville police for the coroner. With Blair were two other soldiers, H. E. Black, 30, and Leo Clair, 28. They were treated for severe lacerations to the face.

Woman's Injury Is Blamed on Fall

Mrs. MacFarlane, 80, in Hospital.

Prince Georges County police last night declared it was "very unlikely" that Mrs. Ellen MacFarlane, 80, of Washington, who was found unconscious in a ditch at Hyattsville Monday, had been slugged.

Policeman Albert Anderson, of the Hyattsville substation, said that from their investigations it appeared Mrs. MacFarlane was injured in a fall.

She is recovering in Casualty Hospital from three severe head wounds and a possible fractured skull. She was found on Arundel avenue at New Cut road, several blocks from Sacred Heart Home, where police said she had been staying.

during this limited time offer!

QUICK FACTS about Automatic GAS HEATING

EFFORTLESS-CAREFREE. No firing or fixing the furnace . . . no residue to be removed . . . no cartage or storage of fuel. Light the furnace in the Fall, set the thermostat to the exact degree of heat you like, and that's all there is to it.

NO MACHINERY. No complicated mechanism to wear out or become noisy or break down. There are completely gas-designed furnaces, or units which will convert your present furnace. Low maintenance—practically no depreciation.

CLEAN-HEALTHFUL. Gas is all consumed to produce heat—nothing is left over. Everything is cleaner—the air you breathe, your clothing, furniture, walls and floors. Constant uniform temperatures mean less colds and doctor bills.

LOW OPERATING COST. Automatic Gas Heating Plants are designed to burn gas alone, efficiently without waste. When you heat with gas your heating costs are computed in one all-inclusive bill for heating—not spread out on repairs, depreciation of equipment, cleaning bills, etc. And Washington enjoys one of the lowest gas rates for home heating on the Atlantic Seaboard!

PREPARE FOR WINTER NOW!

Just the sale that hundreds have been waiting for! An opportunity to install the latest, advanced type of Automatic Gas Heating Unit—AT A PRICE! Only $5.00 down installs a new 1935 model gas heating unit in your present furnace, which makes it a truly Automatic Gas Heating System! You have 24 months to pay the balance on payments everyone can afford.

Think what it means to you! First, a price much lower than that of any other type of automatic heating unit. Second, the countless advantages of the only completely automatic method of heating, which means no more fuel to order, no more fuel to store, no more furnace tending, ash carrying or shovel wielding.

And last but not least—steady, uniform temperatures in your home this winter and every winter to come without even a thought to the heating plant or outside weather!

More than 6,000 of your neighbors have found this ideal form of heating economical. Let us tell you more about it—NOW—DURING THE SALE!

New Dancers, Singers Here Add Joy to Night Club Life

Atlantic City Team Makes Bow at Madrillon; Shoreham Preparing for Indoor Opening; "Sid" Is at the Mayflower.

By Kay Ware.

Summer is going out. And new amusement places are coming in. Loudly sing whatever ditty pleases your fancy, and go where the mead bloweth, or the ice clinks, or the lights flare, or—where anything is going on.

Peter Borras believes that opportunity knocks but once, and when it knocks, the best thing to do is engage a splendid dance team from Atlantic City and the World's Fair. Result: The Blake Donaldsons, who put on waltzes, tangos, carlocas and hot Harlem numbers for the Madrillonites.

But, opportunity sometimes knocks twice, and the second tapping brought in Kitty Simon, 18-year-old blues singer with dark coloring and a contralto voice. A poised and lovely young Washingtonian is Kitty.

Don't forget that the Brusiloffians are a full show in themselves, and that the Madrillon opened formally last Saturday night. The newness of the enterprise hasn't worn off yet.

Also, Saturday ushered in a cocktail hour there. Doors open for cocktails from 5:30 to 7 p. m. Sweet and feverish music of Arsenio Ralon and his concert ensemble.

Club Michel offers the same bill—Bobby Gillette and partner, Shirley Richards, dance team. Miss Richards is as pretty a dancer as you'll see in any night club. Stage people follow Holley Hall, singer and Dorothy Morgan, from "Fifty Million Frenchmen." Ten girls, who comprise the chorus, and an augmented orchestra finish the bill.

Lafayette Hotel has opened a new cocktail room. Details later.

Indoor Opening October 1.

The Shoreham is getting ready for a big indoor opening on October 1. That means good-bye to comfortable summer clothes, men. As for the ladies, get out your loveliest gown, and see that you get yourself a date that night.

Manager Moore announces the arrival of one Bobby Sanford, New York's youngest and most successful theatrical producer. (That's what we're told.) Mr. Sanford will be there in person to introduce his series of performers. Cast includes 6 principals and 12 of the "Glorified Girls" from the latest "Follies."

Shoreham management will introduce on October 1 a new schedule. A little complicated, but here it is: Dinner hour from 7:30 to 10 p. m. and supper dancing from 10 to 2 a. m. Two shows nightly, more general dancing. Supper dancing to be a separate feature and not included in the dinner price. No change of prices or cover charge.

Now, to get down to present facts. Ramon and Ruth, dance team, are [illegible] over this week. They present Hindu number among other things. Marshall and Inez, another team, go through waltzes and novelty rhumbas. Helen Grenelle, Kansas born, and Broadway acclaimed, honors the British and American golf teams with a golf dance.

Who started this wave of rhumbas? The Reyes?

Georgie-Porgie, pudding and pie—
He ate too many: they made him cry.
Can you blame him? Nor can I,
Because there are so many good chefs in Washington whose business it is to make people eat more than they should because they can't bear the thought of leaving anything on the menu untasted.

A Man of Many Tongues.

There's a new man at the Mayflower named Sid. He is somewhat of a linguist and is likely to switch from "I Only Have Eyes For You" to the latest South American ditty, then over the steppes for a good Russian tear perker. See if you can stump him on a language.

They do a lot of sleight-of-hand at the Lounge. For luncheon there are low couches and smooth-topped tables, then about 4 o'clock, someone waves a hand, or utters a magic word, and a nicely polished dance floor is awaiting and inviting you.

H-m-m-. More of Heigh-Ho. Still rather reserved, the management, but visibly excited. But then, if Pete Macias is there to take care of things, the opening night, October 5, should be good.

Meanwhile the musicians are taking various vacations—Burrus Williams is sunning himself on the Miami shores, Don Shook has just come back from a Southern tour. Marty (Debutante's Delight) Rubins has been seen around. Pete, while the others laugh and loaf, is scanning the mid-Western horizon for talent.

Remember the date: October 5.

Italian students won't feel homesick if they dine at Macina's. In fact, several of them did just that last week. Not only one meal, but several.

Out-Door Sports.

Archery, riding, walking, roller skating and golf all enjoyed under the shadow of the Monument. The swan boat, near Capt. John Paul Jones' statue, is ready to take you for a ride in the cool of the evening or in the heat of the day.

Canoes can be hired on the Potomac. Boat houses at lower M street.

There are pools in Rock Creek Park where pebbles can be skipped.

They're having gay old times at the barn. You'll like the big windows on the dance floor where you can pause and look out on the landing fields. Brooke Johns seems to be everywhere at the same time. He has a knack of making you feel as if he'd known you for years, even though he'd met you only five minutes ago.

Pools: Library of Congress Court . . . Memorial, with tiny sailboats on it . . . Behind the Pan-American Building, watched over by an Aztec god . . . Golf courses after heavy rains . . .

And fountains: In the Post-office court . . . New one at Chevy Chase Circle . . . Scattered all around the Capital . . . and at Union Station . . . Meridian Park, with cascades and statuary . . .

Variety at La Paree.

La Paree's master of ceremonies makes you believe he's Joe Penner. Most people can't see or hear Mr. Penner often enough anyway, so the M. C.'s act is a welcome one. Luis and Pegi are with the show another week. Ann Del Rio croons and looks very Spanish, Lilly De Haven struts in the Harlem manner, Marie Fowler and Roy Beck vocalize with Emory Daugherty's orchestra.

Things to be seen: Dance with a skipping rope, another with a fan, girls in leopard skins and tails giving an imitation of the jungle, high hats and tap numbers as a finale.

More Spanish at the Lotus. This time it's a dancer with a cape. Name's Chula. And still more Spanish—a Bolero by Rico and Michele. Andre and Frances (sounds French this time) are classed as comedy-eccentrics, Dorothy Fox sings, and Eddie Michaels goes through tap and acrobatic routines.

Rumor becomes fact. Loewenkeller is going to have its face lifted. By the time the work is completed, the garden will be glass inclosed, the ceiling will have stars and moving clouds on it, there will be two dance floors, and the whole place will be comfortably snug for the winter season. Garden, as is, closes the latter part of the week. The new inclosures are being made now, and will be put in place in pieces. While all this is going on, the main dining room, balconies and what not will be in operation.

Clew Is Found To Missing Girl

Stained 'Kerchief and Wire Loop Discovered Near Gallaher Home.

Detroit, Sept. 25 (AP).—Discovery of a bloodstained handkerchief and a loop of wire half a block from the home of Lillian Gallaher added an ominous note today to the search for the 11-year-old girl, missing since Thursday, just as police officials were expressing the hope she would be found alive.

Until tests are completed, showing how long the blood on the handkerchief had been exposed to the air, it can not be definitely decided whether an important clew has been found, detectives explained, but another systematic search of every possible hiding place within many blocks of the Gallaher home was ordered.

High police officials and the girl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gallaher, admitted they had little on which to base a belief that Lillian would be found alive.

Acting Police Superintendent James E. McCarty said he believed the girl's body would have been found by now had she been slain, and asked the State police to make widespread inquiries about girl hitch-hikers.

Italian Princess Given Names Of Nine Saints and Ancestors

Thousands Bare Heads Around Palace During Christening.

Naples, Sept. 25 (AP).—A big long name was given Italy's little princess this afternoon as holy water from two rivers was sprinkled on her royal head in informal baptism ceremonies.

The black-haired baby girl born last night to Crown Princess Marie Jose and Crown Prince Umberto of Italy's reigning family, was christened with the names of nine saints and royal ancestors.

Her full name is Maria Pia, Helen Elizabeth Marguerite Melina Mafalda Ludwig Tecla Gennaro.

The little princess—whose birth at 11:15 p. m. yesterday set all Italy to rejoicing and so pleased her royal grandfather, King Victor Emmanuel, that he signed an amnesty releasing Italians imprisoned for two years or less—was baptized while thousands assembled outside the royal palace stood with bared heads.

A detachment of musketeers of the Balilla, Benito Mussolini's Fascist organization for boys 8 to 12 years old, stood guard at the palace door.

Cardinal Ascalesi of Naples and Mgr. Ciniglia, the royal chaplain, who officiated, sprinkled the infant's head with water brought by plane from the River Jordan and from the River Piave, where Italian armies won their great victory in the World War.

The princess weighed 8¾ pounds.

Honeymoon Crash Victim Recovering

Sacramento, Calif., Sept. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Virginia Gates McCafferty, daughter of Dr. William Gates, president of the University of Pennsylvania, whose honeymoon was interrupted by an automobile collision Sunday night, continued to show improvement in a hospital here today.

Her husband, Dan McCafferty, and two others injured in the collision also are recovering. Ellen Johnson, 7, was killed in the accident.

'Eat, Drink What I Want When I Want It,' Mexican Says.

Santa Ana, Calif., Sept. 15 (AP).—Senora Leandra Chairez plans to celebrate her 121st birthday tomorrow by rising at 4 a. m., dancing an intricate old-time Mexican waltz to modern music, and dining on fried chicken.

She will top off her special repast at the Orange County Farm with a hand-rolled cigarette.

Senora Chairez has been a county ward for several months. She left her grandchildren in Costa Mesa, near here, for a short visit, and when she returned they had moved. She doesn't know their whereabouts, but she thinks they returned to Mexico.

Modern music, good food and tobacco, meditation and prayer, comprise all that is life at 121, says the sprightly woman.

"Occasionally I like to drink, but I don't drink as much as I used to," she said. "I like best that tequila of my native country, but I can drink good wine now and then. I have no receipe for long life. I eat what I want when I want it. I smoke cigarettes, and I roll my stockings, because they are more comfortable that way."

"I was born at Agua Calientes, in the interior," she said. "I have the year of my birth stamped on a piece of tin, but somehow or other the tin became lost, and when I found it was so rusty I couldn't read it. My friends were good enough to remind me of the date, else I might have been able to cheat a few years."

Senora Chairez is not the claimant of the title of southern California's oldest woman, Senora Martina de la Rosa claims she will be 129 on November 11. She also lives in Orange County.

Princess Will Start Life Anew in England

London, Ontario, Sept. 25 (AP). Princess Alexandrovina, who lived in splendor before the fall of Imperial Russia, soon will leave the destitution of a fourth-floor flat here for England and a new start.

The princess, her English husband, Cecil Windebank, and their 11-year-old son received word today the city council had authorized payment of their passage back to England. She is a daughter of Prince Alexander Shanavskoy.

Frank B. Kellogg in Hospital.

St. Paul, Sept. 25 (AP).—Frank B. Kellogg, justice of the World Court and former Secretary of State, was in a hospital today. Physicians said no operation was contemplated at this time. His illness was not serious.

Ambassador En route Here From France

De Laboulayes Will Be Met by Capt. Sable in New York.

Entertainments Are Set for Navy Officers to Visit Capital.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye sailed yesterday from France aboard the Paris for this country, and will arrive in New York early next week. At practically the same time they arrive in New York, the French destroyer, d'Enprecasteaux will come to the Washington Navy Yard for about a week, so the entertaining of the young officers will devolve upon the Ambassador and his staff.

The Naval Attache of the Embassy, Capt. Louis Sable, went to New York yesterday to meet the ship, and to greet Lieut. Comdr. de Lestrange, who is commanding the craft.

To Entertain Officers.

Capt. Sable will rturn to Washington the end of the week to prepare for the reception of his fellow officers when they arrive. He will entertain at a reception for them on their arrival in the Capital, when they will have the opportunity of meeting a number of Naval officers stationed in Washington. There will also be an informal cocktail party in their honor, as well as a luncheon to be given in the embassy.

The plans for their entertainment are indefinite pending the arrival of the ambassador, but they will surely include a trip to Annapolis and a visit to the United States Naval Academy.

Entertained Last May.

Last May when the French training ship, Jeanne d'Arc, was in Annapolis, the Ambassador and Mme. de Laboulaye entertained at a supper dance for the young midshipmen, when they had the opportunity of meeting the charming debutantes of Capital society. It was a delightfully informal party, colorful and gay, the last large affair given at the embassy before the Ambassador and Mme. de Laboulaye, with their two daughters, Mlle. Marie Therese and Mlle. Agnes, sailed for their French home to spend the summer.

The group of officers aboard the destroyer d'Enprecasteau is much smaller than the group which included officers and midshipmen from the Jeanne d'Arc, so probably there will be no large party next week, but the Ambassador and Mme. de Laboulaye will plan something equally interesting for the young Frenchmen.

The Counselor of the German Embassy, Herr Rudolf Leitner, has left Washington to join Frau Leitner at their summer place in Bluemont, Va., for a fortnight, after which they will return to their home in the Capital for the winter.

Beta Chi Sorority Plans Dance Oct. 13

The Harvest Hop, the annual fall dance of the Beta Chi Sorority, is to be held on October 13 at the Willard Hotel. Mr. Arthur Godfrey will present some very talented entertainers.

The interchapter social committee of the sorority, composed of Miss Lorraine Branson, of Alpha Chapter; Miss Bertha Ryan, of Gamma; Miss Alma Nussear, of Eta; Miss Mary Costello, of Mu; Miss Iranell Jester, of Xi; Miss Etta Dennis, of Pi, and Miss Mary Keasler, of Upsilon, met at the home of the chairman; Miss Teresa Trant, of Rho Chapter, on September 18, and completed plans for the dance.

Specialties have been planned and the dance promises to be one of the outstanding events of the season.

Mr., Mrs. Haines Leaving for West

The Counselor and Mme Florescu upon their return will be at the Shoreham until Monday, when they will assume occupancy of the home of Col. and Mrs. George C. Thorpe, in Woodley road, which they have leased.

Daughters Pay Visit to Home Of Campbells

Mrs. Burdette Wright and Mrs. Robert Kleberg at Arlington.

Former Representative and Mrs. Phil P. Campbell have with them at their lovely old home in Arlington, Va., two of their daughters, Mrs. Burdette Wright and Mrs. Robert J. Kleberg.

Mrs. Wright, who made her home in Georgetown until last autumn, when Mr. Wright was transferred to Buffalo, is spending a few days here with her parents, and enjoying an unexpected reunion with her sister, who was formerly Miss Helen Campbell. Mrs. Kleberg now makes her home on the famous King Ranch, at Kingsville, Tex., one of the largest and most famous ranches in the country, established by her husband's grandparents, and which Mr. Kleberg now manages.

Mrs. Kleberg, then Miss Campbell, was visiting on the ranch, and her marriage to Mr. Kleberg was really an elopement, for with another couple with whom they were riding they went into Mexico, just across the border, where, with a poncho draped over her habit, the lovely blonde Miss Campbell became the bride of young Mr. Kleberg, scion of a famous Texas family. Mrs. Kleberg, who is accompanied by her young daughter, will remain with Mr. and Mrs. Campbell until early next month, and plans to be back at the ranch on October 5.

Mrs. Wright has been doing a few of the things that occupy young matrons each autumn, placing her two young sons in boarding school, this year near Wilmington, and seeing to the re-leasing of her former home in Georgetown. She will remain here until the end of the week, and then with Mr. Wright, who joined her in Washington yesterday, will return to Buffalo.

Capital Hails New Princess Born in Italy

Event Recalls to Society Memories of Brilliant Ball Given Here.

The announcement of the birth of the first child of the Crown Prince of Italy, Prince Umberto, and Princess Marie Jose, was received in Washington with great joy, for many of the countrymen of the little Maria Pia, Helen Elizabeth Marguerite Melina Mafalda Ludwig Tecla Gennaro, as the princess was baptized, are at present in the Capital. Not only the members of the embassy staff, who will celebrate the occasion with the Ambassador, Signor Augusto Rosso, at the embassy, but some 300 loyal young Italians, students from 26 universities who have been in Washington for the last two days.

The birth of the little princess recalls to Washington society the brilliant ball given by the Ambassador of Italy and Donna Antonietta de Martino, on the occasion of the marriage of the Princess of the Belgians, Marie Jose, daughter of the late King Albert of the Belgians and Queen Elizabeth, to young Prince Umberto, son of the King of Italy, Victor Emmanual III, and Queen Elena, on January 2, 1930. The marriage of the "darling of the Belgians" to the heir of the Italian throne was truly an occasion for festivities and the ball at the embassy here was worthy of the day.

An official reception for members of the Diplomatic Corps, Cabinet officers, high Army and Navy officials and smart resident society began at 10 o'clock, and the several hundred members of the younger set who were invited for the ball which followed danced until daylight. Donna Antonietta, always a popular hostess, remained until the last guest had departed.

Elaborate favors of Italian handtooled leather, silver paper cutters with knots of ribbons of the Italian and Belgian colors, bearing the Fascist insignia, and small bracelet trinkets of gold on bands of the national ribbons were given to the guests. There was a gay and informal cotillion led by the then First Secretary of the Polish Embassy, Mr. Victor Podoski, and more favors.

Perhaps had the little princess Maria Pia been a prince another such celebration would have been planned, but the great part of the celebrating in her honor is taking place in Naples, where she was born in the traditional home of the Crown Prince of Italy.

Mrs. Casey, Mrs. Fowler Return to Washington

House-Hunting Season Starts In September

Managers Endure Trials as Fussy Tenants 'Look Around.'

By Marguerite C. Rand.

THE hunting season is now on—not for rabbits or quail, but for apartments—for in Washington most leases terminate on October 1. From the standpoint of hundreds of resident managers in Washington's some 3,800 apartment buildings—though I'm not sure all of them boast a resident manager—it is a difficult time of year. If you are looking for entertainment, just talk to your resident manager and she'll tell you some interesting stories.

There is the pompous man who wants to see a two bedroom apartment. The manager says politely, "I'm sorry. We have no real two-bedroom apartments vacant. I can show you a three-room apartment in which you might be able to use the dining room for an extra bedroom."

"Yes, yes, Let's see it."

He is shown the apartment and inspects it carfully.

"So this is one bedroom and that is the other. Well, then, where does one eat?"

The resident manager is patient. "Of course, if you use the dining room for a bedroom, you'll have to eat in the kitchen or the living room."

Never Do.

"No, no' that would never do." He looks annoyed. "Why did you take my time to show me this apartment?"

Then there is the woman who wants a three-room apartment on the top floor and is shown the same apartment the gentleman saw.

"Oh, but we must have a dining room and we need two bedrooms."

"Then perhaps you'd like to see a four-room apartment unless you'd be willing to sacrifice the living room."

"Of course not."

"We have no four-room apartments vacant just now, but I could show you one here on the top floor that will be vacated October 1.

"Oh, no. I couldn't pay for four rooms. Besides, I think the top floor is too hot."

Following the showing of apartments comes the period of moving in, with all its complications.

In our building we had the misfortune to lose our old janitor and the office sent a new one, highly recommended, to our resident manager, Mrs. B. She viewed him with some suspicion but decided to try him out.

At the end of three days she found him taking a drink of something very potent. She had a serious talk with him and the office fined him. He seemed impressed and said gravely:

"No, ma'am, Mrs. B. I won't take another drink for 50 years."

Alcoholic Help.

A week later Mrs. B. was sure she detected the odor of liquor on his breath, so made it her business to see him frequently during the day. Finally he disappeared and there was no response when she knocked on his quarters. She called one of the elevator boys and told him to knock until he got an answer. After some efforts the boy was successful and the janitor opened the door.

When he saw Mrs. B. he seemed alarmed. She said to him, "George, don't you think this is a queer time of day to be taking a nap?"

"Yas'm. What time is it?"

"It's 4 o'clock.'

'Four o'clock is it?" He scratched his head and looked puzzled. "Four o'clock today or in the mawning?"

He got his walking papers.

Then the new tenants have their problems. One couple moved in and soon called the resident manager because of the strong odor of gas in their reception hall. As there was no gas pipe in the vicinity it was difficult to explain, but they insisted it was gas. Mrs. B. made a survey of the situation and said she was sure it was not gas but gasoline. She asked if they didn't have some clothes just back from the cleaners.

"Oh, no. Besides it's gas."

So Embarrassed.

She pushed aside some empty packing boxes and there in the corner sat a gasoline can with a little pool of gasoline beside it. Of course the couple were embarrassed. The porter, must have brought it up from the car when he carried in their baggage.

Then there was the couple who had had their Chinese rugs and beautiful hand-embroidered linens in storage in a basement. The basement had apparently leaked for they were delivered to the apartment dripping wet. Again the resident manager was called, to console and advise the weeping wife. That problem was solved when Mrs. B. called a good hand laundry and a reliable rug cleaner.

After the apartment hunting and moving season is over, the resident manager has other problems. There is the wealthy bachelor, a clever medical specialist, who occupies one of the best apartments in the building. He has lived in it several years and is amply able to pay the rent if he could just get around to it. But the company is forced to sue him periodically before he realizes the urgency of the matter. Meanwhile there are of course his gas and electric bills which are such an annoyance. After he has neglected to pay them for a sufficient length of time, his gas and electricity are turned off. That is serious and he comes to the resident manager.

"Could I just borrow a few candles? There's something wrong with my lights."

Mrs. B. lends him candles and explains why he has no lights.

"Dear, dear." He'll go right down and attend to it in the morning. He comes again for candles in a night or two but unfortunately Mrs. B. has no more candles. Eventually he pays his bills and all is quiet again.

What to Do About the Women? Wonders Feminine Intellectual

Post Staff Photo.

MRS. PRESTONIA MANN MARTIN.

By Elizabeth Young.

WHAT CAN BE DONE with women?

That's the question disturbing the humorous, scholarly mind of 72-year-old Prestonia Mann Martin, author of the book, "Prohibiting Poverty," acclaimed by intellectuals as a textbook heralding the coming of a new social order, when all humanity will enjoy adequate economic security.

So she's going to write a book about it. In fact, that's its tentative title. But it won't be off the presses next month; nor possibly even next year. Mrs. Martin's brain children incubate slowly, and they spring one form the other in direct literary descent.

"Prohibiting Poverty" was sired by her first book, "Is Mankind Advancing?" published in 1912, and Mrs. Martin proposes to give it a grandchild in "What Can be Done With Women?"

Aristotle was really responsible for Mrs. Martin's advent as an author, he and the contemplative life that was hers back in the teens of the twentieth century, in a spacious, orderly secluded home on Staten Island, N. Y.

The Greek's Mentality.

"I have been reading the life of Aristotle, going over that most stupendous list of his mental accomplishments," Mrs. Martin recalled yesterday, sitting in the shade-drawn dusk of her suite at Arlington Hotel.

"I determined to make a study of human progress, to learn how far and in what fields we had advanced since Aristotle. All this was long before the war, of course. Humanity was in a state of elation. It felt it had come up from the monkeys to godhood. Yet I doubted that material gain meant human progress.

"And when I had written the book, 'Is Mankind Advancing?' I found to my surprise that my conclusion was negative.

"I felt I must do something better; find some answer to the question of why we had not progressed. And the circumstances of my life were favorable to a leisurely and thorough research into the riddle. I was happily married, living in a delightful old house on Staten Island, withdrawn from social distractions, free to read and to think on what I had been reading; to write, take long walks and meditate on what I had written; tear it up and write it over.

Atmosphere of Reform.

"I lived in an atmosphere of reform. My husband had been a Fabian Socialist and an associate of Bernard Shaw. Horace Mann was one of my kinsmen. Since childhood I had been interested in questions affecting public welfare. As a young girl I had read Edward Bellamy's 'Looking Backward' and was carried away by it; transported! I don't suppose this generation ever reads it."

And so out of this cultural soil, nurtured by 12 years' study of the cause and possible cure of mankind's failure to advance, grew Mrs. Martin's National livelihood plan which she outlines step by step between the covers of "Prohibiting Poverty."

According to its provisions, the youth of the Nation would be drafted at the age of 18 into a National industrial organization—the "Commons"—to devote eight years to producing collectively and distributing a sufficient livelihood in prime necessities for the entire population, themselves included; this without buying, selling, or the use of money. At 26, their service finished, they would demobilize and disperse to their homes, their places to be taken by fresh relays of new recruits coming up annually from the schools.

Poverty and fear of poverty would no longer exist. The fundamental of true freedom—economic security—would be won, Mrs. Martin and her adherents maintain.

Roosevelt Episode.

It was Mrs. Roosevelt who brought the book to public notice. Speaking before a women's conference on "Youth," in New York City in October, 1932—a month after the book was printed—Mrs. Roosevelt referred to a book which interested her tremendously because she said it seemed to offer a practical solution of the problem of poverty. Mrs. Martin was in the audience, well back, and dozing. Excited friends prodded her awake, introduced her to Mrs. Roosevelt, and overnight she became a public figure.

But that's all water over the dam to Mrs. Martin.

Because her research into the cure of poverty had brought her meantime to the conclusion that only womankind can work the cure.

If, through the centuries, woman may be said to have acquired one inalienable characteristic which sets her peculiarly apart from man, that characteristic is the technique of distribution—as opposed to, or offsetting, man's acquired characteristic of acquisitiveness. Such is the theory from which Mrs. Martin's next book will proceed.

She proposes to show that modern women are failing their natural obligation in this regard.

Man's technique of acquisitiveness, let out of bounds by modern invention, has led to twentieth century overproduction and economic pandemonium because woman hasn't been on to her job, as Mrs. Martin sees it. Woman's is the function of systematically apportioning the spoils of industrial battle to a waiting human family, capable of absorbing it, hungrily in need of it.

"That's one reason why I think women must put a shoulder to this reeling social structure," said Mrs. Martin. "Another is that men are in the fixed habit of thinking in terms of politics and finance."

"The 'Commons' will furnish an arena of activity for women of the future. In that domain she can function and make available to society her native talent, now being stamped out. She can do a job that nobody but a woman can do!"

Although she is on a vacation flight from the September heat of Florida—where her husband, John Martin, occupies the chair of International Relations at Rawlins College, Winter Park—Prestonia Mann Martin is not vacationing mentally. Her hotel suite was eloquent of that: notebooks, card files, scrapbooks, hastily jotted agenda, were all about.

Rocking Babies And Lullabies Old Fashioned

Furniture Accessories for the First Aren't Sold Here Anymore.

SHOCKING revelations await those illusioned persons who believe all mothers rock their babies to sleep and sing tender lullabies to them at bedtime.

For the modern baby is never rocked to sleep, and he wouldn't recoghize a lullaby if he heard it. And baby specialists in this country agree bedtime rocking and cuddling are about the worst things that can happen to a helpless child.

"It gets babies into the bad habit of expecting attention at a certain time, and should no be done," says Dr. E. B. Brooks, Washington pediatrician, who disagrees with the Austrian physician who recently stated that babies in institutions do not thrive because they are denied a mother's lullaby and a little petting and rocking at bedtime.

Less Rocking, Better Babies.

"I am quite sure babies will grow up to be just as fine men and women if they aren't rocked," said Dr. Brooks, "And I expect they turn out better."

And Dr. William F. Burdick, another prominent pediatrician, agrees with him. "Decidedly I am against rocking children to sleep," said Dr. Burdick yesterday. "I don't mean that children should not be mothered. I think they should. But they should be rocked and petted during the day and the display of affection should be spontaneous, not a ritual."

After Combing the Town.

Evidently Washington mothers follow the advice of the child specialists. For a thorough search of the town failed to bring a single rocking cradle or armless rocking chair to light.

"I haven't seen a rocking cradle in 25 years," said one furniture dealer, "and we have no rocking chairs for bedrooms in stock.

"In fact, we have no rocking chairs at all," the dealer said. "There used to be a demand for bedroom rockers, but we stopped selling them years ago. Then we used to sell living room suites with one rocking chair. Of course, they weren't very good for rocking babies, because they had arms. Lately we don't sell any rockers. People won't buy them."

Although Dr. Burdick doesn't approve of rocking children to sleep he still has a rocking chair in his home.

"We bought it a long time ago," he said, "but we haven't used it to rock babies to sleep."

Crickets Invade New Jersey.

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—A great cricket invasion has caused great damage in New Jersey during the past few months, and an early frost is hoped for to give householders relief.

The insects have ravished gardens and destroyed more clothes than moths. They have been attacked with fly swatters, slippers and folded newspapers, and canny housewives have put out insect poisons to kill them, but the crickets still survive.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I read your column every morning but as yet none of the letters you have answered exactly suited my case. Therefore I would appreciate any advice you may give me.

I have been going steady with a boy who lives in the Midwest for the past two years. I lived there, too, and we were constant companions, agreeing almost perfectly. The only time we almost had "words" was when another boy danced several times with me at a varsity dance. In other words, he is very jealous of me.

• • • •

We would have been married but he was not through school and did not have a job. Then when I first came here to go to school, he wrote me that I "obviously didn't care as much for him as I said, or I wouldn't have left." It wasn't that at all—I saw I had more opportunities here.

• • • •

He apologized for writing what he did, saying he was just jealous, and wouldn't do it again. I have had several dates, none of whom I have liked as much as my steady, but I'm afraid if I told him he would be very angry.

The question is: Should I write him that I'm dating? And should I continue going with him when I go home, or forget him now?

• • • •

He has a very good personality, has many friends, is clean and moral, but has this fault—jealousy.

I haven't seen him since last spring, but probably will in several months. If I stay here in Washington I intend to get a stenographic job. Do you think that is why he dislikes my being here?

Thanking you for your consideration, I am, J. W.

Think It Over.

DEAR J. W.: Next to moral viciousness and dishonesty, jealousy is perhaps the most difficult to deal with of all the ignobler manifestations of character. It isn't so much a single fault in itself as it is a confession of stunted spiritual and intellectual growth.

• • • •

Also, our reaction to its existence in the mind of some one close to us tells us rather accurately the true nature of our feeling for that jealous person. If we are flattered, consoled and reassured by someone's possessive jealousy regarding us; if we; tenderly condone and forgive it; even, in a measure, understand it; and account it a lovable frailty, then it's likely we truly love that person, and could happily live down that fault.

• • • •

But if we are resentful, impatient, annoyed; if it drives us to petty deceptions; makes us faithless to our own concepts of right standards of conduct; causes us to wonder if this person is to be a positive or a negative factor in contributing to our happiness, then the signs read, "Danger ahead."

It should not be hard for you, bearing these conditions in mind, to decide just how important to your happiness is the boy you left behind. If you love him enough to risk marriage with him, I think it would be needless recklessness to add fuel to the flame of his jealousy. I think, also, it would be unfair to deceive him.

On the other hand, a school girl transplanted to a new environment is making a dangerously heroic sacrifice of possibly greater chances for romantic happiness, if she becomes a social recluse in order to oblige one jealously possessive man—particularly when it is probable neither the girl nor the boy are clear about their feelings concerning the other.

Should you write him that you're "dating?" I should. He's entitled to the truth. And the manner in which he reacts to the truth will either terminate your friendship—are you prepared for that?—or establish a new pattern of conduct and tolerance on his part, possibly leading to greater mutual understanding.

Should you continue going with him on your return home or forget him now? That's for you to decide. However, if you really feel you can forget him, simply by making up your mind, I think you may as well. It would resolve the whole situation without further agitation.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Beauty's First Step Is Posture, Not Creams, Says an Expert

Mlle. Mala Rubenstein says correct posture is a fundamental step to beauty.

Determines Whether You Have One Chin or Two, She Declares.

By Frances Mangum.

UNLIKE most beauty experts, Mlle. Mala Rubinstein believes the first step to beauty is taken, not so much with creams and lotions, as with posture.

While stressing the importance of external treatments she emphasizes the necessity of "standing erect, head held high."

The niece of the popular cosmetic scientist, Helena Rubinstein, yesterday addressed her guests across the breakfast table in her suite at the Mayflower.

"Before we consider the care and coloring of the skin," she said, "let us start at the beginning with the contour of the face. It would be impossible to overemphasize the importance of posture in this respect.

If They Realized.

"The way a woman holds her head and her shoulders," she continued, "has a great deal to do with whether she will have one chin—or two, whether the flesh in her face will sag or stay firm. I feel certain if women realized the effect of good posture they would have it, despite everything!"

Since this is Mlle. Mala's first visit to the United States, she has been greatly interested in studying American women.

"It seems to me," she said between bites of buttered toast, "that women here try very much to look alike. They seem to follow a general scheme of make-up just as they wear dresses and hats like so many others. But," she added, "they are very stimulating. They are so interested in what you have to say and take so well to suggestions.

"I have talked to many of them about their make-up. I tell them how important it is to suit their rouge and lipstick, even eyeshadow and mascara, to the color of their dresses."

Mlle. Rubinstein explained that while one lipstick might be very good with a dark brown dress it wouldn't do at all for a bright green one.

Vary Make-Up.

"As one changes hats for different dresses, it is just as important to vary make-up. And, of course, to wear the same cosmetics morning and night is very bad indeed. For daytime wear colors must be subtle. In the evening vivid.

"Whereas violet eyeshadow alone—applied high on the lid, contrary to custom—is very good at noon, in the evening it should be complemented with a lustrous metallic shadow placed closer to the lashes," she said.

In order to have individuality in make-up, she believes every woman should study her type and consult an expert to ascertain just what shades suit her best. And then she should stick to these and not change because her friends are all wearing some other kind.

"For after all," she concluded, "individuality in make-up is the nth degree of artistry."

PILLAR TO POST

THERE is a skeleton in the closet of Ward M. Canaday, advertising director of the Federal Housing Administration. He is the daddy of the time payment plan. This idea came to him early in youth when he was promoting the sale of Hoosier kitchen cabinets during the depression year of 1907.

• • • •

It was an exceedingly bright brain child, for the idea boosted the sale of the cabinets 40 per cent in one year, and led the way for similarly increased business in vacuum cleaners, washing machines, automobiles, electric refrigerators and radios, in the order named.

• • • •

In other words, Mr. Canaday inaugurated the great American habit of buying on the installment plan. Whether he ought to be lynched or invited to dinner depends upon the point of view. One school of economists might argue he should be blamed for plunging the Nation into the reckless habit of spending beyond its income, another might think he should be praised for raising the standard of, living above every nation on earth.

Even in 1915 there was still some stigma attached to buying on the installment plan. It was about that time that Mr. Canaday went to work for the Willys-Knight Motor Co. to promote the idea of selling automobiles on the installment plan. The motor industry was aghast at the suggestion.

• • • •

"People wouldn't want to drive cars their neighbors suspected were being bought on time," was the scathing argument against it. It is needless to add this opposition did not last long after the Willys-Knight Co. began selling cars that way.

• • • •

After learning about Ward Canaday's deep, dark past, you'll like him anyway because you won't be able to help it. He developed an advertising business of his own, world-wide in scope, and neglected it to help the President and Mr. Moffet put over the idea of remodeling old homes and building new ones to stimulate business.

• • • •

It is interesting to note that during the war, Mr. Canaday was a member of a Federal board whose business it was to put a stop to private building, diverting this kind of labor and material into production of the necessities for carrying on war.

If Mr. Canaday really had much to do with changing Americans from thrifty, plodding citizens into speed maniacs by this time payment plan for selling automobiles, he has become a victim of the system himself. He is continually hopping about the country in airplanes, casually keeping contacts with Chicago, San Francisco and New York by telephone.

• • • •

Yet he yearns for the simple life. There is nothing he likes better when in Washington than to have a plain, home-cooked meal with people like the Stu Godwins and the Steve Earlys. So—if you are not too bowed down by payments on the car, the house, the refrigerator, the fur coat &c.,—there is no finer fellow to ask home to dinner.

Men Turn to String.

Men are wearing string gloves more and more, finding them warm and practical. Then, too, they rarely cost as much as the leathers. String in glove form has been woven in many new and interesting patterns.

Pupils Dictate Study Subjects To Educators

Problems of Today Bring Demand for Sociology and Economics.

BEWILDERED by the insistent problems of today the people of America are turning to universities and colleges for help. And educators are both amazed and stimulated by this increased demand for knowledge.

"Until a few years ago the educators told the people what to study and their instructions were always followed," said Mrs. Hugh Bradford, former president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. As the new president of the National Parent-Teacher Magazine, Mrs. Bradford is in Washington for a few days in connection with her work.

"But today the people are telling the educators what they want and need," she continued, "and they are demanding it, in spite of slashed budgets.

"Educators, too, are realizing they can learn from the laymen, and they are asking the public to participate in their conferences. This, I think, is one of the healthiest signs of the age."

Parents, especially, are presenting their problems and asking the answers, points out Mrs. Bradford.

"They want to know how to run households on decreased budgets, how to keep children happy and contented when they can't give them spending money," she said. "They realize they must equip their children to face a strange and rapidly changing world. They are somewhat frightened, somewhat confused, but they are determined to do a good job."

Product of Bewilderment.

This bewilderment and sense of unpreparedness is inspiring parents all over the country to organize child study clubs, to write in to educators, to go to libraries and study economics and sociology and child psychology, Mrs. Bradford believes.

"Thousands of parents write in here seeking the best answers to their problems," he said. "We are trying to answer these questions honestly and wisely. And we are trying to show the parents in a dramatic and impressive fashion where the responsibility lies. We are not quibbling about the matter. 'It's up to us.'"

Takoma Park Club Will Hold Program

The drama department of the Takoma Park Woman's Club will present it's first program of the season this evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Mrs. A. A. Spear, No. 1 Valley View avenue.

Prof. R. Deane Shure, Washington composer and teacher of voice and piano, will play some of his original compositions, and give a talk on his trip to the Holy Land.

Miss Virginia Rand, of Washington, professor of speech at Maryland University, will give a short talk on "Scenes Back Stage at the Roadside Theater." Other numbers on the program include a paper by Mrs. Munger on "Poetic Drama in America," and musical selections by Mrs. Mueller, and the presentation of a poetical fantasy under the direction of Mrs. Frank J. Hopkins.

Anti-intellectualism Held A Far-Reaching Trend

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—A wave of anti-intellectualism is sweeping the world, Dr. Moritz Geiger, a Nazi exile, told the students of Vassar College yesterday in an address. He warned the students not to be influenced by this movement.

"The intellectual wants clearness, discussion and consciousness," he asserted. "Can there be a doubt that colleges must take their stand on the side of clearness, not on the side of confused ideals?"

Evening Magic In Lace.

Fine, sheer laces of the Chantilly or net type are being used for evening wear. These gossamer laces are extremely beautiful and make the new lace dresses far different from last year's versions.

Old Egyptians Played With Small Marionettes

Marionettes have been found among the rubbish in the shaft of a tomb near the pyramid of Sesotris at Lisht, Egypt. The tomb is of the twelfth dynasty, and other objects found in the rubbish are certainly of that period. So there is no doubt the new finds are 5,000 years old. There are three figures two inches high, representing little men dancing and clapping their hands. One of the tiny men apparently has grown horns.

Life insurance companies tell us that the gradual breakdown of the human body causes more deaths every year than disease germs

1 If your physical let-down is evidenced by lack of appetite... loss of weight... nervousness... sleeplessness... paleness... a tired feeling or lassitude caused by a lowered red-blood-cell and hemo-glo-bin content in the blood—then S.S.S. is waiting to help you... though, if you suspect an organic trouble, you will, of course, want to consult a physician or surgeon.

Make S.S.S your health safeguard and, unless your case is exceptional, you should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food... sound sleep... and renewed strength.

2 Take a course of S.S.S. Remember, your present run-down condition may have been a slow, gradual process. Likewise, a reasonable time is required to rebuild full strength. S.S.S. is not a miracle worker—no rebuilding tonic is—but it is a scientifically proven and time-tested medicine. This is your guarantee of satisfaction. Its benefits are progressive... accumulative... and enduring.

3 Moreover, S.S.S. is not just a so-called tonic. It is a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also has the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood. This two-fold purpose is important. Digestion is improved... food is better utilized... and thus you are enabled to better "carry on" without exhaustion—as you should naturally.

If your condition suggests a tonic... if you feel low... get a bottle of S.S.S.... take an appetizing portion just before meals. You will find it is truly a blood and body tonic. You should feel and look years younger with life giving and purifying blood surging through your body. You owe this to yourself and friends.

S.S.S. is sold by all drug stores in two convenient sizes. The $2 economy size is twice as large as the $1.25 regular size and is sufficient for two weeks treatment. Begin on the uproad today. S.S.S. is really an inexpensive way to better health and more happiness. So many have said— "S.S.S. makes you feel like yourself again."

Do not be blinded by the efforts of a few unethical dealers who may suggest that you gamble with substitutes. You have a right to insist that S.S.S. be supplied you on request. Its long years of preference is your guarantee of satisfaction.

Knitting News: Authority Here For Two Days

She Gives Information on How to Make Yarn Into Something Smart.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

JUST how to knit and what to knit causes hundreds of women needless worry. If they will call in the knitting department of a local store they may have the pleasure of talking to a nationally known knitting stylist, and thus get the real low-down. They may also drop by there either today or tomorrow morning or afternoon to see a style showing of knitted suits designed by famous Parisian couturiers.

What's more, at this store there are three teachers, all of whom have studied at fashion clinics where they learned all the newest, simplest and most effective ways of turning mere balls of yarn into a suit that looks like a million.

Even those who think they know the A B C's of knitting will find from one visit that knitting "ain't what it used to be." It's possible to knit suits in such a way that those (and they are the majority) who aren't perfect 14's, 15's, 16's, &c., can be fitted down to the half-inch of a curve.

Reduce Fire Risk.

In view of these facts a certain manufacturing concern sponsors a noninflammable ironing board cover, equipped with fasteners and large enough to fit a standard size board. It costs only 29 cents and is certainly a sensible precaution in any home.

Clever Reflections.

Mirrors, hundreds of them, form the sides and tops to some lovely gift boxes on display in a downtown store. The display is fascinating. Reflections of the passing shoppers multiplied 5, 10, 15 times by the innumerable bright boxes, myriads of lights which give a prismatic effect!

All of these brilliant boxes contain dozens of downy, pastel-colored puffs. Some of them also hold a certain sweet-scented dusting powder.

It is difficult to conceive of more ornamental toilet accessories, lovelier gift prizes, guest remembrances, or hostess gifts. They are only $1.

Whisk Away Spots.

Chemically treated sponges have only to be rubbed over felt hats, suede gloves, bags and shoes to rid them of fingerprints and soil of any kind.

They are marvelous conveniences to those economists who wish to save the price of professional cleaning and yet who want their things as spic and span as can be.

One simply takes the sponge and rubs. Spots are gone in the twinkle of an eye.

It's a marvelous thing for a man who hasn't "time to bother." He can give his hat a rub or two and there, his hat looks brand new.

Sewing Class.

Who hasn't wished for a knack with the needle so they could turn out what looks like a Paris model by their own craftsmanship? Who hasn't tried snipping here and there with the scissors, basting and taking out, stitching and all manner of other seamstress tricks, only to find the result is a waste of time and money, and the would-be dress a veritable mess? Not that sewing is so difficult. It simply takes infinite patience and a knowledge of how to begin.

There's a seamstress here who is going to start a sewing class. You can come morning, afternoon or night, bring your material and pattern, and she'll show you how to proceed. The dresses which she makes are so beautifully fitted and finished, it would really pay to listen in on her instructions.

The rates are remarkably reasonable.

News of Something New.

Here's news of a new compact!

It had no sooner appeared on the counters of a local store than it created quite a sensation. And certainly there's every reason why it should. It comes in all the lovely fall shades so it will match new hats, dresses and coats.

And here's the inside story. When it's opened there's a comb case, cream rouge and powder rouge, and a loose powder section. Could anything be more complete? And when you've seen it you'll wonder could anything be more attractive. It is lightweight, long and narrow.

Masculine Soap.

Men are catered to in many respects by the toilet goods department of a downtown store. The newest temptation to masculine patrons is nothing less than a soap. But it's a man's soap. It comes in a particularly hard cake that no amount of rubbing seems to wear down. At least not for a long time.

It hasn't the faintest suggestion of jasmine, rose, or carnation fragrance, despite the fact Paris reports say men are as anxious for perfumed toiletries as women.

Capital Kitchen

By Susan Mills.

AFTER a beef roast has been sliced, and the delicious little "scraps" fall to the platter, one wonders what to do with them. They can be ground for hash or meatloaf, but there are other ways of serving these scraps in their whole state.

Keep leftover pieces of meat moist. That is the secret of good warmed-over dishes.

If it goes into a hot dish, protect the meat from overcooking with a layer of mashed potatoes, spaghetti, noodles, a cream sauce or a barbecue sauce. Cook it just long enough to reheat the meat. Meat pies, turnovers, croquettes, meat patties or loaves and casserole dishes are all delicious main dish concoctions from the end of the roast. For warm days a jellied loaf, a meat salad or sandwich spread is always acceptable.

Sliced Beef in Barbecue Sauce.

Slice cold beef in thin slices.

Make a barbecue sauce by melting 3 tablespoons of butter or fat drippings from the roast in a frying pan, adding 1½ tablespoons of flour, 4 tablespoons of vinegar made up to 1 cup with water, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 teaspoon of prepared mustard and a dash of paprika.

Let the slices of meat heat through slowly in the sauce. Serve with garnish of parsley.

Pork and Potato Pie.

2 cups diced cooked pork
2 cups pork gravy or white sauce
½ cup celery
1 green pepper
2 cups cold mashed potatoes
Seasonings of salt, pepper and paprika

Make a sauce of gravy of 3 tablespoons of drippings, 3 tablespoons of flour and 2 cups of milk. Add the chopped celery, pepper and meat and season with salt and pepper. Place in a casserole and spread a layer of mashed potatoes over the top. Dot with bits of butter and sprinkle with paprika. Bake slowly for 30 minutes. Other vegetables may be used with the pork such as carrots or peas.

How to Keep Well

Sleeplessness.

THE number of persons who suffer from insomnia is very large. It is an insidious sort of difficulty and, once firmly established, is a stubborn problem. It is a condition that is full of terrors and torments to those who have experienced it for any great length of time.

In order to function normally the brain requires sleep. Certain individuals apparently do well on four or five hours of restful sleep; others require eight or nine hours. The number of those who can retain mental alertness and normal physiological activity on less than eight hours' sleep is relatively small.

Tradition has handed down numerous types of mental gymnastics that have been used for wooing sleep, such as counting sheep jumping over a fence, or watching a long line of locusts carrying away grains of corn. I once heard a soft-voiced, pleasant-mannered woman lecturer tell of her remedy for sleeplessness. It consisted of lying quietly in bed and recalling all the good deeds that she had accomplished throughout life. The beneficial influence of self-congratulation would, she said, so expand the heart and soothe the sensibilities as to lull one into sound sleep. Most of us would probably tie ourselves into mental knots in a struggle to recall even one good deed!

Among the essential causes of insomnia may be mentioned poor digestion, with the absorption of toxins from the intestines; overloading the digestive tract with a heavy evening meal, excitement, nervous tension, either for work or play, and inability to stop thinking about the events of the day and the plans for tomorrow.

A glass of hot milk at bedtime, sipped slowly while eating a cracker or two, will often work wonders. Adjusting the head of the bed so that the individual lies half reclining has helped many. Others do better without pillows. Occasionally poor circulation is responsible, and a hot water bottle or two at the feet or about the lower limbs will dilate the capillaries, stimulate blood flow and supply a sense of comfort that is quieting. Sometimes heat as well as cold may defeat sleep. The bed clothes may be too heavy, causing the retention of too much of the body heat.

One of the most successful remedies is a hot foot bath, with or without a teaspoonful or so of ground mustard. Immerse the lower extremities halfway up to the knee for half an hour at bed time. During the process recline in a comfortable chair with a good light and a good book. A patient who tried this method relates that he awoke at 5 o'clock in the morning, after a dream in which he was fleeing barefoot over ice floes, pursued by a pack of wolves. The foot bath was stone cold. He dared not repeat the method without setting an alarm clock.

Fear and worry murder sleep, and constantly tossing about the bed is mentally and nervously exhausting. The activities of the day have more to do with sleepless nights than many of us realize. Some nervous systems quiet down quickly following severe strain; others cool off slowly, as it were. Anything that is conducive to repose and to relaxation should be practiced. Try to do things more deliberately. Take more time. Don't hurry. The cultivation of the habit of deliberate action can not fail to influence repose reflexly. A good deal of mental discipline will be required to turn our thoughts into channels that have little to do with personal problems and affairs. Nevertheless, with some effort and concentration, it may be accomplished.

One's bed is usually a mighty comfortable spot. With self-training and the observance of certain simple rules of hygiene, we may ultimately tune in on sleep.

Silver and Gold or Imitations Make Autumn's Chic Jewelry

They're Worn in the Evening to Set Off Formal Elegance, and in a Different Guise With Tailored Clothes and Even With Sports Things.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—The more precious the precious metals become in the eyes of the of the world, the more precious they seem to become to fashion, too. And in addition to appropriating much metal for fabrics, metal-shot satin and taffeta trimmings, for instance, she's going in strong for silver and gold in jewelry.

Not only in the elegant pieces worn with formal costumes, but even in the simple tailored and sports designs. And you'll find both silver and gold, or imitations of them, combined with shell, wood, galalith, enamel, composition and colored stones or used alone in necklaces, bracelets, pins, clips and earrings for all times of day and types of costumes.

Gleaming Fashion.

It's smart on two counts. One because of the big fashion for gleaming touches and the other because of the equally big fashion for a bright contrasting accent on a dark colored costume.

What to select this metal in? Well, bracelets, certainly. Because the sleeves of most dresses are close fitting on the lower arm and quite plain. They are the perfect spot to act as background for your contrast.

Then, too, some of the softer types of dresses have short sleeves. And that leaves the bare arm fairly crying out for a touch of color.

Pins or Clips.

And a second just as certain selection will be pins or clips. Because there are scarfs and draped necklines to be held in place.

Often a pin will be part of a set of two or more pieces. You'll notice that the filigree metal pin at the upper right corner of the picture matches the earring and necklace on the figure. And that the sports bar pin (at the bottom) has a mate in the sports earring. The third sketch shows a novelty pin which adds a dressy touch to any simple dress.

Earrings in Fashion.

You may or may not want earrings. You're in fashion either way. The hats which sit well up on the head allow for wearing them, and you'll see them with sports costumes (wood and metal is a good combination) as well as with dressier ones.

If your dress necklines are high, as most of them still are, you'll probably stick to pins or clips in the throat region. But if you choose one of the new lower neckline drssses for afternoon wear then you'll find a silver or gold filigree necklace the perfect thing for your spot of brightness.

Tomorrow: Black - and - white dresses in fashion.

Jewelry of the types described is available in Washington in all the better jewelry shops and department stores.

What Today Means

"Libra."

IF SEPTEMBER 26 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 a. m. to noon, from 2 to 4 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 8 to 10 a. m., from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 9 to 11 p. m.

Dilatory tactics practiced by business men may prove rather exasperating on this date, if you should be endeavoring to close transactions involving substantial sums of money. Do not, however, feel discouraged, for if you persevere it may be a very short time before the deals are consummated. It may prove excellent judgment to take nothing for granted on this date, but satisfy yourself thoroughly before accepting vague statements and promises.

Influences conducive to excitement or confusion can be counteracted by not allowing your nerves to become "pumpy" or your temper being aroused. If you will make up your mind to maintain a friendly attitude you come in contact on this date there is every possibility of it being a very pleasant one.

Married and engaged couples, as well as those eager to plight their troth, will do well on this date to avoid showing any signs of annoyance or irritability over little trifles.

If a woman and September 26 is your natal day, you are very likely highly emotional and romantic. You probably are easily affected by exciting or distressful scenes, so far your own happiness you should avoid them.

While capable of artistic achievement, work of an industrial nature may offer better money possibilites for one of your temperament. You should make a wonderful housewife and get a great deal of happiness and contentment out of your own home.

The child born on September 26 generally when it reaches its teens, shows a decided preference for some particular line of work.

If a man and September 26 is your birth anniversary, your motto should be: "Judge not that ye be not judged," for you may be prone to jump to hasty conclusions regarding people. A natural born money maker, you should prosper in any line of business you give your earnest attention to and learn thoroughly. You should be happy married.

THE MAN WITHOUT NERVES

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

Sam Cresson, London suburbanite, kills himself and leaves a note in which he gives financial reverses as the cause. This is confirmed by James Huitt, manager of the bank which handled his account, at the inquest.

Huitt is constantly annoyed by a young man named Tyssen, who has recently come to Sandyways to gather material for a novel. Tyssen makes friends with Anthony Sarson and his pretty sister, Pauline.

Late at night Anthony and Pauline observe Tyssen on the golf course making shots worthy of a star. They insist upon taking him home to dinner with them. He denies being an expert.

Mentioning Huitt's strange nature, Pauline is surprised to see Tyssen shaken as by some queer emotion.

"COLD?" Tyssen repeated. "Not I. I am so interested. Go on."

"I am not sure," Pauline continued, "that there is much more to dilate upon. The station lights—they mean so little. The village lamps have gone. Ah, up there in that cutting through the woods are the lights of Sandywayes Court. If one could see the other side of those windows! I wonder?"

"Do you know Lord Milhaven?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"We catch fugitive glimpses of him," she replied. "We read paragraphs in the paper. If he meets us in the vicinity and realizes that we are neighbors, he bows to us in stately fashion. Our great man, Mr. Tyssen. A lover of art, a great traveler, a great hunter, a famous aviator. He has his own private aeroplane and aerodromes up near the golf club. For some short time a statesman. To me he always looks like a man who has worn out life too soon. I looked up his age the other day. He is only 49, but he seems tired already."

"I wonder who his other dinner guests are tonight?" Tyssen ventured. "I heard him invite Mr. Huitt."

Tyssen Is Curious.

"Sure to be financiers, I should think," Pauline replied. "Lately he has taken a fancy to that sort of thing. He thinks that the world can be saved and conditions reestablished by the pooling of huge fortunes."

Tyssen was leaning back in his chair with his arms folded, frowning in puzzled fashion.

"I wonder, if he is such a great man, why he troubles to ask a man like Huitt to dine with him."

She looked at him in surprise.

"Why shouldn't he?" she asked. "And what does it matter? I believe Mr. Huitt is supposed to be marvelously informed upon all financial affairs. . . . Now we swing back right across the railway line. We come to the police station. The dear old sergeant who is always complaining because he has to take Tom, the village policeman, as a tenant! No light there. Sergeant and policeman fast asleep."

"As a matter of fact," Tyssen corrected her, "the policeman is on duty in Sandyways."

"And how do you know that?" she asked.

"Curiosity prompted me to find out," he admitted.

Sandywayes' Inhabitants.

"We move on to Mrs. Foulds' shop," she continued. "Not a glimmer. I suppose you think you ought to be burning the night oil up there, writing your novel!"

"I am very content here," he assured her.

"Next comes the house and estate," she went on, "of Mr. Roland Martin, No sign of Mrs. Roland Martin, who the gossips say has deserted her husband because he drinks too much and is living in Paris! Not a light in the place. An easy household; two maid servants and a charwoman in to help once a week: alternate Sundays, holidays and alternate weekdays for the parlor maid and cook. No parties, unless Mr. Martin gets a friend in to share a bottle of whisky."

"And next?"

"The house and estate of Mr. Andrew Cresset. Really, that is a very pleasant abode and the garden is beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Cresset are exactly what you would suppose them to be like after a casual glance, and Sybil is a dear girl. All the same, I wish she were not so fond of Anthony."

"Why?" he asked.

A Curious Lesson.

"Because," she replied, "I don't think that Anthony is very likely to settle down for a long time yet. Father was too ambitious for Anthony. Eton and Oxford are not the perfect beginnings for a young man who is supposed to take his father's place in a wine merchant's business."

"Isn't there anybody else here you could tell me about?" he asked.

She laughed.

"Really, I begin to think, Mr. Tyssen, that your own description of yourself was a just one! You are a very curious person."

"The first man who ever solved a picture puzzle was a curious person." Tyssen answered. "He had patience. Have you ever realized what it must be like to be passionately anxious to solve a certain problem and to have that problem handed to you in thousands of pieces, and the rod of fate held over your head whilst you were bidden to put them together and solve them?"

Pauline swung herself up in her chair and turned toward him.

"Whatever are you talking about, Mr. Tyssen?" she demanded.

The dramatic note had vanished. He was again a little stumbling, faintly uncouth.

"I'm hanged if I know," he admitted. "That's how I always think of my work, if I think of it at all. A novel is like that. You have all the materials there chopped up in pieces—men and women, events, passions, details, everything that counts, and there is someone that bids you put them together and mocks at you. You make mistakes, too. Such rotten mistakes."

She was round upon him like a flash.

"Such as pretending you don't play golf?"

"That's nothing," he told her. "I'll go. I must be keeping you up."

Nothing to Tell.

"You won't do anything of the sort," she assured him. "Groves is bringing us out cool drinks directly. I like the way you are talking to me, Mr. Tyssen. I am getting very curious about you. Go on talking about yourself now. Tell me where you were brought up, what school you went to, what profession you followed before you decided to become literary."

He shook his head.

"I am not such a fool as to tell anyone my story," he said bluntly. "Besides, there isn't one to tell."

"Where did you learn your golf?" she persisted.

He laughed jarringly.

"Golf," he repeated. "You have seen me play half a dozen approach shots on a still night!"

"Quite enough, thanks. Are you going to answer my question?"

"Some day—yes," he declared, with a sudden change of tone and manner. "Some day I will tell you everything and ask you everything because—well, because it's you."

She felt her hand suddenly gripped—gripped with long, passionate fingers and then discarded.

"Good night," he said shortly.

"But—but what about that drink?" she asked, a little breathless.

He was already almost out of sight—a dim shape, uncouth, too large in the hips, too small in the shoulders, with a characterless, slouching walk. A cloud drifted over the moon. He vanished into the darkness.

From the time when cocktails were served in the stately library of Sandywayes Court until the reverent offering of port at the conclusion of the dinner, Sir Julian Botot, the world-famous financier, who, except for Mr. James Huitt, was Lord Milhaven's sole guest at dinner, monopolized the conversation. From first to last he spoke of money—money that had been made and lost—and his own achievements with regard to money. Lounging in a high-backed oak chair, the host of the party appeared sometimes to be on the verge of boredom. He was always courteous, always ready with the right response, but he had at no time the air of a man deeply interested in his guest's conversation. Huitt sat like a sphinx, except that every now and then he made a comment, and once or twice he corrected his fellow guest's figures with regard to some undertaking. If he was not sympathetic, he was at least attentive. One fancied, however, that at the back of his brain he might have had alien thoughts.

"Does not this piling up of money sometimes weary you," Milhaven asked once.

Great Sport.

"Does it weary anyone?" the financier replied. "It is the greatest sport in the world. Hunting wild animals, as you have done, Lord Milhaven, in Abyssinia and Mesopotamia is nothing to it. To bring gold out of impossible places, collect into your keeping the offerings of others, to show them good results, to double your own fortune and treble it whilst you are making the world richer—that's my idea of sport. No, my profession never wearies me. Why, think, Lord Milhaven," he went on after a moment's pause, "even you feel the pull of it. You have plenty of other interests in life, a position and possibilities which I could never have, but even you find pleasure in making money. I won't say that you have quite a city man's brain, but you have what is perhaps better sometimes—you have vision. I would turst you before some of the professionals, when you took up a prospectus, to decide whether the thing was right or wrong."

"You flatter me," Milhaven murmured.

No Head for Figures.

Sir Julian tugged at his black mustache. He was a sallow-complexioned man, a little puffy under the eyes, with a big frame and powerful shoulders. He had sprung from the middle classes, had commenced life as a country stock broker, inaugurated a trust with an attractive name, bought up commercial undertakings one after the other, nearly every one of which had turned out to be successful. He had weathered two periods of depression and came out unscathed. The confidence which the British public is slow to give to a financier pure and simple had become his by right.

"As a matter of fact," Milhaven went on, toying with his wine glass, "I have no head for figures at all. Huitt here is the man I rely upon, my technical adviser. He gives significance to them, so far as I am concerned."

Sir Julian nodded.

"I have often thought," he said amiably, "that our friend Huitt was worthy of a better fate than to sit enthroned in a bank manager's confessional. You should strike out for yourself, Huitt. I would give you a job tomorrow at twice what Barton's are paying you."

The Concessions.

Mr. Huitt showed no sign of either emotion or gratitude.

"I like my position," he confided. "I like the security of it."

"A matter of disposition," Sir Julian pronounced. "I prefer a shade of risk myself, although as a matter of fact I never take it."

Milhaven smiled.

"That's where your money-making as a sport falls down then, Sir Julian," he said. "There's no sport without risk."

"Do you take risks, Lord Milhaven?" the financier asked.

"I have taken many," his host replied. "I have gone after a wounded lioness out of obstinancy. I have shot tigers in a jungle where the odds are slightly against the human. I even once invested £20,000 in Julian Bott's Trust!"

"Not a shadow of risk there," Sir Julian laughed. "Your animal business doesn't get me. As a matter of fact," he went on, his thumbs slipping with the ease of familiarity into the openings of his waistcoat, "I have finished with taking chances myself. What's the good, when there are so many certainties? . . . The most wonderful port in the world, Lord Milhaven, but no more, thank you. Four glasses are enough for any man."

Textbooks Biased, Charges Professor

Many textbooks in use in American schools are biased, one-sided, and narrow in their presentation of subject matter, declared Prof. Bessie Louise Pierce, of the University of Chicago, in a survey report made public at Teachers College, Columbia University.

"This is especially true of history books," she declared. In her survey Prof. Pierce examined nearly 400 school books, and found them "shot through and through with National spirit," and showing the effect of increasing pressure by various patriotic groups and by legislation since the World War.

"Textbooks and teachers are scrutinized as to their "Americanism," and are summarily disposed of if they do not meet the test," said Prof. Pierce.

American schools and courses of study, she said, "seriously ignore adequate information concerning international relations," and give scant attention to economic trends and cultural contacts while devoting many pages "to demean foreign friend or foe alike, either openly or implicitly, in contrast with the native son."

Center Is Chief Worry; Four Veteran Guards Enliven Hopes.

Temple, Florida Next, but Coaches Turn Eye on State Contests.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor, The Post).

BLACKSBURG, Va., Sept. 25.—Tucked away atop an Alleghany plateau within punting distance of the borders of Kentucky, North Carolina and West Virginia, a Virginia Polytechnic Institute football team is preparing to fare forth in search of the State title, and I don't mean fourth.

The boss down here is Mr. Henry Redd, fat and fittingly florid, who is launching his third season as head coach of Virginia Poly, known to the trade as V. P. I. Mr. Redd, at this writing is preserving his union card in Football Coaches Local, No. 23, by breaking down freely and confessing that the outlook for his team is as black as the heart of the Lindbergh kidnaper.

Thus Mr. Redd maintains his status as a football coach in good standing, but, as far as his dire predictions are concerned, stand by for a word to the wise: Football coaches' forecasts are but the illegitimate daddies of their thoughts. It's a paradox. The worse their public prophecies materialize, the happier the coach.

Great First Year.

This is supposed to be a piece about the V. P. I. football team, but bear with me to the extent of another paragraph about Mr. Redd, if you are still interested. It seems that Coach Redd, who was plucked out of the V. P. I. freshman camp two years ago to tutor the varsity squad, had the unfortunate good luck to set an example for himself in his first season that he is finding it difficult to maintain.

It was the great 1932 team at V. P. I. that was Redd's first varsity coaching effort. That team beat Georgia and Alabama, won the State title from here to there, and lost only one game—to Kentucky. Hence, Mr. Redd's difficult position.

They opened their season here last Saturday by smacking down an inferior Roanoke College team, 21 to 0, but the enthusiasm of V. P. I. followers is necessarily tempered by the weakness of the opposition. Next Saturday, the opposition will be something else again for Tech inasmuch as they sally up to Philadelphia to take on a Temple team coached by Pop Warner and purportedly loaded to the gun'nels.

Florida is Next.

After that, Florida, a team that is picked to win the Southeastern Conference title, will pay a social visit to Blacksburg, and by that time, there will be some concrete evidence as to just how many guns V. P. I. is packing this season.

But Redd and his coaching henchmen, Tex Tilson and Monk Younger, are primarily concerned with their intra-State games—V. M. I., Washington and Lee and Virginia—and victory in these will salve whatever wounds Tech might incur against out-of-State opposition.

I watched them practice today and Mr. Redd trotted out a squad that was in extreme good health. There were boys from the hills, the tall, rangy fellows, most of

Nationals Drop Two Games to Red Sox

Boston Clinches Fourth Place in League by Victories.

BOSTON, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox became assured of finishing in the first division of the American League for the first time since 1918 when they clinched fourth place today by taking both ends of a double-header from the Washington Nationals, 1-0 and 9-3.

The two games completed this year's operations between the two clubs, giving the Sox the season's series, 14 games to 8.

Fourteenth for Ferrell.

Wes Ferrell scored his fourteenth victory by shutting out the Nationals on five hits in the opener. Boston's winning run came in the ninth when Dusty Cooke singled off Lefty Bob Burke to left center, took third as the Washington hurler booted Arthur Graham's sacrifice bunt, and scored on Rick Ferrell's single to center.

The second game was a free hitting affair, with the Sox making their blows more timely than the Nationals. Graham, the Sox new right fielder, making his first Boston appearance, featured at bat and in the field.

U. S.-Mexico Polo Will Resume Today

AN UNDERDOG, but a dangerous one, the Mexican Army polo team goes into the second game of its series with the best combination the United States Army can produce this afternoon, forced to check the onrush of the same slam-bang American quartet which galloped to an 11-to-6 victory in the opening match a week ago today.

A victory for the United States today would sound the death knell for Mexico's hope for an international conquest and give the Stars and Stripes its second series triumph of the year over the invaders. The United States won two out of three games in Mexico City in April.

Army officials are planning to accommodate a throng of at least 10,000 at the West Potomac Field today. Additional bleacher seats, selling at $1 and 50 cents have been erected. The game, originally scheduled for Sunday, but postponed because of the soft field, will start at 4 p. m.

Less Than Even Choice.

Despite the hard, fast condition of the playing surface, the Mexicans are less than an even choice to win in the general consensus of experts. A number of observers, however, regard the visitors a good bet in the face of the marked hardening of the field in the last few days. The turf yesterday was several degrees firmer than that on which the opening match was played, when the soft sod contributed vitally to the visitors' defeat.

Accustomed to the dry, solid fields of the Mexico City plateau, the Mexicans are lost on soft ground. Both the players and ponies suffered during the last six chukkers of the match. While the field remained hard during the first and second chukkers, the Mexicans were matching their opponents stroke for stroke.

Aided By Soft Field.

The sudden superiority of the American team play over the Mexicans may be partially explained by the increased cutting up of the ground as the game progressed, to the obvious consternation of the Mexicans. On a hard field, the ball rolls true and unless both players and ponies have had experience on a soft field, the latter will play havoc with their particular style of play.

Both teams will take the field with the same line-ups which started and finished the opener. The Mexicans will have Capt. Juan Graciada, No. 1; Capt. Antonio Nava, No. 2; Capt. Quintin Reyes, No. 3, and Capt. Antonio Perez, back.

Americans' Line-up.

Capt. Chester E. (Stub) Davis, the veteran No. 1 of the Americans, who scored seven times last Wednesday, will be at his customary post with 24-year-old Lieut. Eddie Walker, the "baby" of the team, at No. 2. Lieut. George H. Reed, 200-pound son of Gen. George W. Reed, of Washington and former Western High School student, will be at No. 3 and the captain of the team, Maj. C. C. Smith, will be at back.

The Mexicans yesterday appeared eager to resume play. While their display last week showed flashes of fine polo, they feel their exhibition was only ordinary at the best.

The Americans engaged in some stick and ball work in the morning yesterday and the Mexicans walked their ponies over the bridle paths in the afternoon. Members of the United States team said they expected nothing in the nature of an easy victory.

Cub Rookie's Home Run Turns Back Reds, 1 to 0

Chicago, Sept. 25 (AP).—A second-inning home run by Phil Cavaretta, 19-year-old Chicago high school first baseman making his first big league start gave Guy Bush and the Cubs a 1-to-0 verdict over Cincinnati before a 15,000 ladies' day crowd today.

Bush fanned eight and held the Reds to four hits for his season's seventeenth victory.

Better Pitching Faced By Detroit in Series

By Alan Gould.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Tigers haven't seen anything yet. They have the American League pennant all to themselves but they may as well make the most of it, after 25 years of waiting, for it will be a banner of another color when they go into action a week from tomorrow against the flag-bearer of the National League.

By comparison to tackling either the New York Giants or the St. Louis Cardinals, Mickey Cochrane's battling bengals will think their pennant victory was just a breeze.

It is taking nothing whatever away from the sensational exploits of the Detroit club, or its all-around class, to say that the balance of power no longer rests with the American League. It may not have swung altogether the other way, but the fact is that the current American League champions by no means measure up to the stature of the fearsome Yankees of Ruthian days or the powerhouse Athletics of 1929-31.

The Tigers have power, speed, splendid leadership and a pitching jewel in Schoolboy Rowe.

Decisive Last Year.

Pitching was decisive in the conquest of the Giants over Washington in the last world series and it has kept the world champions from falling completely apart during their otherwise discouraging finish in the pennant race.

Neither the Tigers nor any other team in baseball can show a "big four" the equal in consistency to the current Giant quartet of Carl Hubbell, Hal Schumacher, Roy Parmelee and Fred Fitzsimmons. The nearest approach to them is the Dean brothers of St. Louis, with Tex Carleton and Bill Walker in support, so that anywhere the Tigers look they are likely to run into the toughest pitching opposition they have faced all year.

Giants Experienced.

Considering current events in the rival league, Detroit probably would rather tackle the Giants than the Cardinals. Assuming they get their wish, the Tigers will need all their acknowledged batting power to break down the defense of the "big four." Pitching is at least 60 per cent of the battle, in a series limited to seven games. All four Giant hurlers have been through either the pennant or world series fire, or both, and have the additional advantage of exploiting types of pitching delivery which figure to baffle most batsmen facing them for the first time.

Hubbell, despite a less effective season than he enjoyed in 1933, still is the "big money" flinger of the Giant staff and likely will oppose Rowe in the opening game at Navin Field. The outcome of this duel will play a vital part in rival team fortunes, for it seems certain that as "Rowe goes, so go the Tigers."

Braves Top Dodgers On Frey's Homer, 9-6

Brooklyn, Sept. 25 (AP).—After Linus Frey's homer tied the score in the eighth, the Braves nicked Tom Zachary for three runs in the ninth inning and defeated the Dodgers, 9 to 6, today.

J. Dean Wins 28th Despite Late Rally

Holds Foe Runless Until Vaughan's Homer in 9th With One On.

Allows Only Six Hits; Phils Deal Blow to New York Hopes.

The mad rush of the Cardinals toward first place neared its climax yesterday as the St. Louisans defeated the Pirates, 3 to 2, and sliced the league lead to one full game as the Giants were being beaten by the Phillies, 4 to 0.

The Giants have three more games to play and the Cards five, and the Giants must sweep those three to gain a tie, provided the Cards win all of theirs. In that case, the clubs would be forced into a three-game play-off for the pennant in neutral territory as near as possible to Detroit.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Cardinals, behind six-hit pitching by Dizzy Dean, defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates, 3 to 2, today and moved within a game of the National League-leading Giants, who lost to Philadelphia.

By winning their remaining five games, the Cardinals can tie the Giants, even if the world champions win the three contests remaining on their schedule.

Dizzy in Rare Form.

The elder member of the pitching firm of Dizzy and Paul Dean was in fine form as he scored his twenty-eighth victory of the season. A three-run attack in the first inning off Southpaw Larry French gave Dizzy an early lead and he held it and kept the Pirates scoreless until the ninth, when Paul Warer beat out a slow bounder to Durocher and "Arky" Vaughan hit a home run to the roof of the right-field pavilion.

Hits by Frisch, Medwick and Collins were the important blows in the first inning. With one out, Rothrock was safe on Vaughan's wide throw and Frisch doubled to right-center, sending Rothrock to third. Medwick's single to center scored Rothrock and moved Frisch to third. Collins' pop double over Suhr's

Sun Erin Drives to Head Decision Over Galon Boy in Havre de Grace Feature

Kilmer Colt Comes From Far Back

Legume Third in Field of 7 Juveniles; Winner Pays $4.80.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent)

HAVRE DE GRACE PACE TRACK, Sept. 25. — Seven frisky juveniles paraded to the post just before 5 o'clock today and treated the customers to a real horse race. At least, Sun Erin and Galon Boy provided the chief thrills as they finished heads apart in a fierce drive that lasted right down to the wire. A length away from the battling front pair came Legume.

Sun Erin, a member of the smart set from the fashionable stables of Mrs. Willis Sharpe Kilmer, is a full brother of Sun Edwin and was bred at the famous Kilmer Court Manor Stud, where every horse is treated like the Prince of Wales. Backed into favoritism, Sun Erin turned in a whale of an effort, covering the 6 furlongs in a creditable 1:13. He was ridden by the rather unfashionable jockey, Tommy Luther, but the boys put up an Earl Sande performance on this particular occasion. In fact it was Luther's work that shared the spotlight with his determined mount.

Off to Good Start.

Galon Boy went away from the barrier like he had a big red apple awaiting him at the finish, and before the others of the field could get in motion he was winging along in front with a "catch-me-if-you-can" attitude. In the meanwhile, Luther was pumping Sun Erin into best stride. Galon Boy continued to hold sway entering the stretch, but it was apparent at this point that Sun Erin would have something to say regarding the purse distribution.

In the stretch, the Kilmer colorbearer moved up on Galon Boy and the two hoofed it along with everything they had. Sun Erin had just a little more left than the early pacesetter and he had his all-important head out as the imaginary wire was reached.

And so, friends, those who held the necessary $2 pasteboards on Sun Erin repaired to the rear of the betting ring, where they were redeemed at $4.80.

Another sizable early-week crowd viewed the proceedings, and the mutuel play, that makes all this possible, showed some improvement.

Half-Miler Scores.

Uncle Billy, a lowly graduate of the Maryland half-milers, was a surprise winner of the first race, a six-furlongs test for two-year-olds. He set all his own pace, bore out in the stretch under the whip, and just lasted to hold a half-length margin over Brill-Falon. Sun Lure was third. The winner paid $16.70.

A. H. Schneiderman won his second purse at the meeting with Bally Bay, when the Happy Time gelding easily defeated six other Marylandbreds over the six-furlongs of the second number, but lost the horse when it was claimed by C. C. Smithson for $1,500. Rusticubba was second and Sandy Belle third. Bally Bay was the shortest priced winner of the meeting, paying only $3.20 straight.

Sang Froid Ahead.

P. M. Walker's Sang Froid, in the thick of the fight throughout, finished a length in advance of his field in the third race, another six furlongs dash. He paid $8.20. Our David, which fought it out all the way with the winner, was second, a length back of the latter and a scant head in front of the fast-closing Doeskin.

Zandra stole up in a courageous stretch run to overhaul Major General for major honors in the mile and a sixteenth fifth race.

UNCLE BILLY, moving clear after start, opened up a winning lead, bore out during the stretch drive when put to a hard drive, then swerved to inside and just lasted. BRILLFALON followed close up from the beginning, challenged strongly, and came with good courage. SUN LURE raced stoutly and continued willingly.

BALLY BAY, away quickly and taken under steadying restraint during the first half-mile, was mildly shaken up during the stretch drive and held RUSTIC CUBA safe. Latter reserved while her stablemate forced the winner to stood a drive gamely, but was no match for the winner. SANDY BELLE came willingly under a drive.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:15. Off at 3:17. Winner, P. M. Walker's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SANGFROID, $8.20, $5.40, $3.90; OUR DAVID (field), $5.70, $3.90; DOESKIN, $4.80.

SANGFROID, viciously handled in the early stages to maintain a brief advantage, was placed under strong urging, met persistent bids from OUR DAVID, and came out slowly nearing the finish. OUR DAVID, a keen factor in the early stages, weakened during the closing furlong. DOESKIN went nicely placed behind the leaders, swung to outside, but could not make up any ground.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-old colts and geldings. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:45. Off at 3:46½. SUN ERIN, placed in near attendance of the early leaders, steadied until swinging into the home stretch, was placed to punishment, then closed stoutly to get up in the final strides. GALON BOY, rushed to the front, was strongly ridden in the closing drive, but failed to withstand the winner. LEGUME went strongly while racing close to the pacemaker.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:15. Off at 4:15½. Winner, W. Sachsenmaier's ch. f. XANDRA, taken off the pace for first six furlongs, finished in resolute fashion and was up in the last 70 yards. MAJOR GENERAL assumed command approaching the home stretch and held on with good courage when the final issue came. ZEMBLA came to the outside and finished with a belated rush. FAIR BILLY, strongly ridden to gain command, was used up setting the pace and he weakened fast during stretch drive.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:45. Off at 4:46½. Winner, E. A. Smith's b. g. (3), by Dodge—Lengai. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:53 1-5.

MY BOSS took command without effort midway of the back stretch, was steadied until forced to a drive, and then continued resolutely to outstay POTION. Latter came through between MY BOSS and CHATTERDOO during the closing furlong and finished determinedly. CHATTERDOO, steadied when displaced, came willingly when ridden hard and fought it out courageously. STEELHEAD, taken around his field to enter contention with a rush, made strong efforts in the last half-mile and held on well.

GAY PARTY challenged strongly when put to a drive, wore REPEAL down and withstood a stout drive to make good. SHASTA STAR, placed close to leaders, responded to a drive and was slowly wearing winner down nearing the end. WISHING STAR, taken up going to the first turn, secured racing room on the inside to better his position, came through a wide opening at the stretch turn, but hung after having much taken out of him to reach contention.

U. S. Rules Supreme When Yacht Folk Go Down to Sea to Compete for Cups

that he would like to thank the American people for "their very wonderful and touching reception."

"We shall take back to England a very pleasant recollection of the sporting attitude of the American public," he said.

Badly beaten at the start for the first time in the series, Vanderbilt's protest flag popped out in his shroud soon after when he was trailing the Englishman by fully 200 yards. A few moments later Sopwith broke out his red banner.

After the warning signal from the committee boat Wilhelmina, denoting 10 minutes to go before the start at 10:40 a. m. (Eastern standard time), Sopwith took Endeavour away from the mark under staysail and mainsail, and Vanderbilt followed him closely. Three times Sopwith swung around in complete circles, trying to shake Rainbow off his stern, but Vanderbilt clung right to him. Then the Englishman sailed off away from the line, and then, with about 2 minutes to go, jibed, that is, turned quickly.

As he did this, Sopwith broke out a big Genoa jib for the broad reach of the first 10-mile leg out to sea on a south-by-east course. He caught Vanderbilt unprepared. The American skipper tacked around in the other direction, but was much slower doing so, got his Genoa up late, and was over a minute late getting over the starting line, fully 150 yards back of the challenger. Meanwhile, Sopwith, his boat under tremendous headway, was pulling steadily away.

Since Vanderbilt must have decided about then to run up the protest flag, his action must have been based on the jockeying before the start. As Sopwith jibed, Vanderbilt was heading straight toward him, and he may have had to fall off his course somewhat in order to pass safely under the Englishman's stern.

To observers it seemed a shame to spoil so thrilling a spectacle as followed with a continuance of the blight of ill feeling that has hung over the series since Sopwith's Saturday protest was not even considered because he was tardy in getting his red flag up.

Endeavour led all through the first leg, stretching her advantage to some 600 yards at one point, rounded the mark and started to beat the second 10 miles to the northeast with a lead of 1 minute 9 seconds. But a most unusual series of British decisions on the second leg, plus trouble setting her big Annie Oakley spinnaker on the run for home, put her far back.

Sopwith, who makes at least one major mistake a day in the critical eyes of the deck-chair skippers, stuck to his Genoa jib after rounding the first mark, while Vanderbilt set his headsails, staysails and Greta Garbo. Then, when the Yankee skipper, after a couple of short preliminary tacks, stood away on a long port tack, Sopwith made the final mistake of failing to cover him.

Throughout the series, whenever Vanderbilt had a lead, he went wherever the challenger went, covering him carefully, preserving his advantage. That's the way yachts win match races. But it's not Sopwith's way.

With the two sloops standing off at diverging angles, it wasn't obvious until they tacked toward each other again, heading for the mark, that Vanderbilt, footing much faster, had opened up a quarter-mile lead. He whipped around the second mark and broke out his big parachute spinnaker for the run home, 2 minutes and 44 seconds ahead.

Where the sail fumbling had dropped Endeavour a mile behind at the start of the leg, she was only 500 yards back and fairly tearing along 6 miles from home, and with 4 to go she was only 300 yards behind.

Virginia Tech

whom never got the feel of a football until they came to V. P. I. Green and raw, but with all the physical attributes. There were boys from the Tidewater, where the V. P. I. alumni are strong, who are short and squat, as easy to step over as walk around. And there was a sprinkling from the North, where V. P. I. is becoming increasingly popular.

Nine Lettermen Return.

By this time, you have probably heard that Redd had nine lettermen back from his 1933 team; a team that beat Virginia, tied W. & L. and V. M. I., and lost frequently to out-of-State opposition. That team last year had many of the remnants of the great 1932 team, but there were no smart and capable sophomores to push them for their jobs, and smug complacence, as much as any other factor, contributed to the poor season of 1933.

But, anent this 1934 team, here's a bit of low-down: An 18-year-old giant from Greensboro, N. C., by the unromantic name of "Foots" Dickerson, is looming as the Moses in the back field, who will lead V. P. I. out of the doldrums and the wilderness this season. Young Mr. Dickerson is reputed to be just about the finest specimen of football player to grace the sophomore class at V. P. I. since before our old pet Hector was conceived.

Real Triple Threat.

Young Mr. Dickerson is no more welcome to the sadly depleted V. P. I. back field than a torrent of touchdowns. He stands 6 feet 2 in his whoopie socks, weighs 185 pounds, still growing, and, if I may be pardoned for digging the phrase out of bromide file No. one zillion and two, he's a triple threat or the meaning of the word is being prostituted.

The foot that Foots Dickerson sticks into the ball is a miniature model of the latest improved U. S. gunboat and he is bumping the leather down the field 60 yards at a clip at this writing. Obviously, he will do the team's punting. He will do the team's passing, too, inasmuch as he can heave the ball through a spare tire at 50 paces.

All in all, Mr. "Foots" Dickerson, a graduate of the V. P. I. freshman team that was unbeaten last year, is a very, very accomplished young man on the football field.

Faces Different Role.

There'll be two veterans in the back field that Coach Redd operates from a modified Warner formation with the single wing back and unbalanced line featuring his system. Capt. George Smith, the best blocking back in the conference, is cast for a different role this year, however. He will tote the ball, too.

They'll have Duncan Holtzclaw, a veteran of that 1932 team, at quarter back, if his game leg doesn't fail him, and if it does, Redd has a grist of other backs to choose from. There's Jim Ottaway, a 165-pounder, who is the fastest man on the team. He was a sub last year. And there's Joe Russell, a swell blocker. And there's George Sodaro, a stocky 170-pounder, who may call the signals. And Hank Sproul, a pony full back who can punt. And Martin Cunningham, a sub for three years, and the sophomore, Duward Stone, a hard-driving 160 pounder.

Porterfield Is Lost.

The item that is probably interfering with the nightly sleep of Coach Redd is the center position. They lost Capt. Bill Porterfield by graduation, and replacing him is as easy a stask as skating on the side of Washington Monument. Redd has Dave Jones, a sophomore from Augusta Military Academy, and Frank Rankin, a 1933 reserve, trying for the job, but they'll still miss Porterfield like A. Hitler would miss his Storm Troops.

But when the subjects of ends is mentioned, Redd's face is wreathed in so many smiles of satisfaction you'd think he had inherited the entire PWA appropriation. And well he may smile. At left end is Red Negri, the conference heavyweight boxing champion, who was all conference end last year, and at the right wing is Dave Thomas, the Hyattsville, Md., lad, who is the modern immovable object on the defense.

Two Giant Tackles.

V. P. I. is well heeled, too, with tackles, what with Tris Huffman, the 210-pound Culpeper giant holding down one post. Mr. Huffman is absolutely the biggest, best and roughest tackle in Virginia; not mean, but just naturally rough. As his running mate he doubtless will have another 210-pounder, Harry Howard, an Orange, N. J., lad, who is fated to beat out three promising sophomores, Mac Banks, Ben Dodge and Buck Ingles.

All of which brings us down to the guards, which again is bringing up a pleasant subject. Four of the nine letter men returning to the V. P. I. team happen to be guards. They are, in the order of their standing at this writing, Red English, 170-pounder, of Alta Vista, Va.; Jim Copenhaver, 195-pounder from Rural Retreat, Va.; Norman Ochs, 195-pounder from Pittsburgh, and Benny Bortnick, 185-pounder from Elmira, N. Y., who didn't play last year on account of injuries.

These guards will come out of the line to lead the interference on frequent occasions, a la the Notre Dame guards.

And when V. P. I. comes down from the hills to take up a few matters with its State rivals this season, V. P. I. will be v. p. i.—very powerful, indeed.

Tomorrow—Washington and Lee.

Middletown Wins First.

Middletown, Md., Sept. 25 (Spl.). Middletown, Frederick County League team, defeated Mount Briar, Washington County League, in the first of a series of three postseason games, 3 to 2. The next game will be played at Mount Briar Sunday.

Civilian and Service Riflemen Open 4-Day Meet at Quantico

MORE than 100 civilian and service riflemen will be on the firing line at the Marine Corps ranges at Quantico, Va., this morning for the opening of the four-day Middle Atlantic States high-powered rifle and pistol matches, in which all competitors' scores will be counted toward the National championships in addition to determining the sectional titles.

Five matches, all for individual competition, are scheduled for today, as follows: Marine Corps cup match, 600 to 1,000 yards, 8 a. m.; National Rifle Association members' match, 600 yards, 9:15 a. m.; Leech Cup match, 800, 900 and 1,000 yards, 10 a. m.; Navy Cup match, 200 yards, 1:30 p. m., and Camp Perry Instructors' trophy match, 200 yards rapid fire, 3:45 p. m.

With the ranges opened yesterday, many of the early-arriving contenders for the championships spent most of the day in getting in trim.

Among the National Guard units represented in both the individual and team matches is the District National Guard. There are entered also two teams of the Virginia National Guard, two of the Maryland National Guard and one of the Connecticut National Guard. Other teams entered in advance are from the Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

Roosevelt to Have Improved Grid Team

Many Veterans Return to Squad; New Field Buoys Spirit.

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE students of Roosevelt High have something to look forward to this football season which is not the privilege of the boys and girls of the city's other high schols.

Whatever else happens, Roosevelt is assured a better team than it had in 1933 and that is something which can't be definitely said for any of the other four institutions.

It can be said for Roosevelt, however, without any exaggeration. Coach Lynn Woodworth, genial leader of the Rough Riders, readily declares that "we can't have as bad a team as we had last year."

Seven Regulars Return.

But if the coach's words sound none too encouraging, the boys and girls of Roosevelt may direct their attention to some of the huskies who will make up their team this year. With seven regulars from last year's eleven back in uniform this season, the general outlook at Washington's newest school certainly can not be said to be distressing. A season's experience has transformed many a losing team into a winning one.

This is not to say that anybody is predicting that Roosevelt will step in and knock off the interhigh championship. But there is every indication that Roosevelt will not be the sort of team this season that has invariably been outclasesd terrifically in the series in past years.

In addition to the flock of veterans returning, the school is infused with a new spirit, largely the psychological reaction created by the school's handsome new stadium. For the first time, Coach Woodworth has been able to develop a team without having to run all over the city finding a place to practice.

The lack of a field has set Roosevelt back anywhere from one to two weeks in getting the team around to tip-top form in past years. This season, however, with their new gridiron at their own doorstep, the players and students alike have developed a spark and spirit which Coach Woodworth says is "the best and most encouraging sign I've seen in years."

G. P. O. Defeats Grace, 5-2, in Post Title Series

Mound Ace's Wildness Costly

O'Meara Weakens in 3d, Lyons Settles Down After Bad Start.

QUICK to take advantage of the faulty play of its opponents, Government Printing Office came from behind to defeat the Grace A. C., Georgetown Church winner, 5 to 3, yesterday in The Post Association interleague week-day championship series on the Ellipse.

The Printers scored five more runs in their half of the sixth inning, but darkness fell and the game reverted officially back to the fifth round.

No series game is scheduled for today. The Kann's Store nine, champion of the Department Store League, will meet the undefeated Heurich Brewers in tomorrow's series attraction on the South Ellipse at 4 o'clock. G. P. O. will face the winner of this tilt on Friday at the same time.

Victim of Wildness.

Vernon O'Meara, Grace pitcher, yesterday was the victim of his own wildness, especially in the third inning.

In the meanwhile, Bob Lyons, making his second appearance on the mound in series competition, settled down after a shaky start and held the Gracemen at bay after the opening innings.

Printing Office won the game in the third when O'Meara walked Harding, Gartland and Willner to fill the bases. Catcher Sole then injected a timely single to score Harding and Gartland. Willner tallied soon afterward on an error by the Grace infield. Some more loose play by the Gracemen allowed Sole to tally in the fifth with another run.

Take Early Lead.

Conter Shifted To Tackle by C. U. Coach

Captain Is Seen Worthy Successor to Gross; Natural Leader.

ART BERGMAN, Catholic University's professor of football, is credited with innumerable strategic moves on the gridiron checkerboard, but Art pulled one this season that promises to overshadow all of its predecessors. He moved Capt. Bill Conter from guard to tackle.

Now, that in itself doesn't seem to be a particularly brilliant feat. Conter probably could have moved over into tackle unassisted if you want to split hairs. The point is, though, that Conter was only a fair guard, whereas he's going to be an outstanding tackle.

Bergman is satisfied that Catholic will not miss Phil Gross, behometh of the '33 eleven who was a tackle's tackle. The Cardinal mentor even has hopes that Conter will outshine Gross who ranked with the best in the east. Bill likes the new position, too, and he's been playing there as though raised between a guard and end. Against Maryland he looked like an All-American.

Conter is a natural leader. Tall and handsome and the possessor of a million dollars worth of personality, he commands the respect and admiration of every teammate. They look to him in the heat of battle for encouragement, and not in vain. His determination and aggressiveness stamp him as one of C. U.'s greatest captains.

Bill hails from St. Paul, Minn., where he starred on the St. Thomas Prep eleven—a championship combination. He is the iron man of Catholic's squad—has never been keyoed in action nor has he ever been seriously injured.

Earl Clark Is Signed By St. Mary's Celtics

Alexandria, Va., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—Earl Clark, formerly of the Boston Braves, has signed to play with St. Mary's Celtics for the remainder of the season, it was announced here today.

Clark will play in the outfield Sunday when the Celtics cross bats with the Fredericksburg Elks at Fredericksburg. The teams will play a double-header that may decide a seven-game series. Eache holds two victories in four games.

Through Edgren's Eyes

Al Crowder Is Seen As a Hero in Series

This is the first of a rather draughty series in which Paul Gallico, probably the most inexpert baseball writer in the country, will attempt to compare the Detroit Tigers and the New York Giants, a laughable idea to begin with. Gallico knows less about inside baseball and strategy than any living sports writer but has disgusting luck picking world series winners. His judgment is not to be relied upon but his hunches are.

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25 (Spl.).—This department at the outset wishes to be written down as selecting the Detroit dynamiters to win the forthcoming world series from the New York Giants, providing the Giants can stand off the amazing last-minute rush of the St. Louis Cardinals and win the pennant. The Giants look to me like a tired, war-weary ball team. If the series is decided on a hysterical up-and-at-'em,-we-can't-lose basis, Detroit will win hands down. And you may be certain that the Tigers will make it that kind of a series.

The Giants have no lift left. They can still play good, mechanized ball, but when the whooping up begins, when they find they have to whip themselves into scoring runs or making put-outs, I don't believe they have it any more.

Remind of '33 Giants.

The Detroits of this year remind you of the Giants of last year. The Giants of this year remind you . . . well . . . a guy who has been champion for a year or so and has got used to it. That great, youthful hysterical drive is missing. Detroit has it in gobs. Detroit is fame-and-money-hungry. Detroit is on the rising tide not only of its own but a whole city's enthusiasm. We in New York don't root the way they do in Brooklyn, or Detroit, or Pittsburgh. We don't vibrate behind a ball club the way Detroit is pulsating with the excitement of victory so that the whole team hums with baseball. You think that doesn't matter to a team? You'll find out.

One doesn't really make a prediction of the outcome of an important sports event based on figures and percentages and averages, though to a certain extent they do matter, but one gets the feel of them somehow. This one doesn't feel particularly like a Giant victory. One can not see Hubbell in the same hero role he played last year, but rather does one feel disaster and sorrow in store for him just the way one sensed that Lefty Grove was in for trouble and humiliation when he pitched against the inspired St. Louis Cardinals a few years ago.

Won't Get the Breaks.

If the Giants are to win, it will be Schumacher or Parmalee who will be the hero. It won't be that Hubbell will be any less the great pitcher, but merely that he won't have the same breaks. If he and Rowe pitch the first game, Rowe will beat him.

And, continuing further with the pure feel and hunch of the series, I would say that besides Rowe, when it is over, the man of the hour will be Crowder, the Washington cast-off who was reascued from oblivion by Detroit and who has been repaying them with splendid pitching ever since. Fate and luck somehow pursue those castoffs, men who are about ready to be locked away in the record books, and give them one more fling at the headlines. Crowder is the logical man. Don't be surprised if he is one of the real series heroes, and the Detroit victory should hinge on his backing up Rowe.

Bunch-Hitting Team.

In spite of the great Giant pitching staff I expect Detroit to outhit the Giants. As you know, Detroit has probably the greatest "bunch-hitting," explosive team in the history of baseball, more devastating even than the old Yanks of 1926-27-28. Good pitchers go as quickly as any other kind before men who can hit in quick, inspired bursts.

There isn't truly a weak hitter on the Detroit squad unless it be Rogell. But I'm way ahead of my series. This particular piece is on the hunch part. The more you think of it the more you sense that Detroit is in the cards to win. It may be the last falter of the Giants skidding into the pennant (or are they?) that makes me feel that way, but then any team that sort of collapses into a pennant isn't exactly a good pick to win a world championship against a fast, aggressive and rested team.

The only other hunch I have is the possibility of Detroit playing inspired, hysterical ball, and being cut down slowly by the Giants' methodical, uninspired, machine-like world series ball behind superb, air-tight, unhittable pitching. But I'm not picking that one. The other is much stronger.

Tomorrow—The two managers, Bill Terry, of the Giants, and Mickey Cochrane, of the Tigers—comparing them physically, mentally and psychologically.

Big Ten Squads Start Scrim Practice

EVANSTON, Ill., Sept. 25 (AP).—Warm weather caused Coach Dick Hanley to restrict the Northwestern workout today to a dummy scrimmage against the freshmen, who used Marquette formations. Leon Fuller, Elgin, Ill., second-string center, was taken to the hospital after suffering an attack of appendicitis. It was feared that an operation would be necessary.

Chicago, Sept. 25 (AP).—The University of Chicago squad went through another long, hard scrimmage today as Clark Shaughnessy worked to develop deception in running plays. The Maroons continued to show improvement, but lacked dash. Sam Whiteside, big sophomore tackle, was given a workout at center and may be used at the position to spell Capt. Eli Paterson.

Minneapolis, Sept. 25 (AP).—Pressed for dry ground, the University of Minnesota gridders scrimmaged today in the fieldhouse as rain fell outside.

Ed Widseth, Crookston, Minn., rookie, kept his place at tackle with the regulars. Pug Lund took the day off because of a cold.

Iowa City, Iowa, Sept. 25 (AP). Coach Ossie Solem sent his University of Iowa football squad against two picked freshmen teams in a long scrimmage today, and was dissatisfied with the ragged play of the Hawkeye line.

First stringers left the field early after futile attempts to break through the Yearling line. The frosh also bottled up the Hawkeye passing attack effectively, the varsity completing but one toss.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 25 (AP).—Behind a new line today three comparatively unknown Ohio State backfield men and a veteran overwhelmed the reserve squad 20 to 0 in a short scrimmage.

Miss Van Wie Has 80; Tops U. S. Stars

Helen Hicks, Now a Pro, Breaks Chevy Chase Record With 77.

By Dave Herman.

AMERICA'S stalwart golfing daughters yesterday served warning to the British stars that they intend to hold on to the Curtis Cup for another year.

Paced by Virginia Van Wie, National champion, and encouraged by a record-breaking score by a former teammate, Helen (Billy Hicks, Uncle Sam's defenders cut loose with impressive practice rounds that augur well for their chances in the international matches Thursday and Friday at Chevy Chase.

Shorn of her amateur status, now America's first "business woman golfer," Miss Hicks, the smiling, smooth-stroking New Yorker, gave the women something to shoot at by scoring a 38—39—77. She finished 1 stroke above the women's par, which will be observed in the matches this week, to smash the feminine course record by a stroke.

Van Wie Shoots 80.

Miss Van Wie, a native of Chicago, who conquered Miss Hicks in the 1933 National championship, looked at the Chevy Chase layout for the first time and stroked around leisurely for an 80, the best score reported by any the American regulars. Without so much as batting an eyelash the tall, slender champion stepped up to her first putt on the initial green and tapped in a 20-footer for a birdie 3. Out in 42, she birdied the fifteenth and sixteenth, playing the back nine in an even par 38. A 7 on the 564-yard eighth caused her score to skyrocket on the first nine.

Charlotte Glutting, of West Orange, N. J.; Maureen Orcutt, Englewood, N. J.'s pride; Mrs. Opal Hill, of Kansas City, and Lucille Robinson, of Des Moines, Iowa, aggregated 82 each. Mrs. Frank Goldthwaite, of Fort Worth, Tex.; Mrs. Leona Cheney, of San Gabriel, and Marion Miley, 20-year-old Lexington, Ky., golfer, did not report scores.

Silent on Scores.

Meanwhile, the Britishers maintained their stolid silence with respect to practice rounds. They "knocked the course about," as they refer to a round of golf, but they continued to encounter difficulty with the heavy fairways.

Of the eight foreign golfers who practiced yesterday, 17-year-old Pam Barton, runner-up for the British championship; Diana Fishwick, 1930 British title holder, and Wanda Morgan, former English champion, flashed the best form. They continued the practice of hitting two and three balls for various shots, as did their other teammates, and refused to report scores.

The respective captains, Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare and Miss Doris Chambers, will select their starting line-ups for the Scotch foursome matches today. Indications are that Miss Van Wie and Miss Orcutt will play the No. 1 team, possibly against Miss Barton and Miss Fishwick, in the feature match. Miss Robinson and Miss Glutting may team in another match, and Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Cheney may represent the third twosome.

St. John Faces Maryland Cripples

Injuries to Stars Makes Problem for Coach Faber Saturday.

WITH his squad riddled by injuries, Coach Jack Faber faces the dismal prospects of sending an eleven composed mostly of rookies into battle against St. John's Saturday at College Park. No less than half of the regulars are on the casualty list.

Lou Ennis, All-State end, and Ed Minion, tackle, just about the best linemen on the entire Terrapin squad, haven't done any rough work for ten days because of injuries and Faber is undecided about using them Saturday because of the danger of more serious hurts.

Earl Widmyer, Maryland's flashy half back is hobbling around on a bad ankle, suffered in scrimmage against Catholic U., and may not see action until the following week. Coleman Headley, one of the most promising of the sophomore backs, is on the shelf with a Charley-horse. He was slated to occupy a half-back post but it definitely out.

Charlie Callahan, regular 1933 tackle, returned to school some 20 pounds underweight and has been unable to regain his proper condition and is out for at least two weeks and possibly for the season. Carl Stalfort, a rugged, earnest lad, has been installed at his place.

The unending stream of injuries that have smitten the squad have forced Faber to juggle the line-up from day to day with negative results on team play. Maryland has been particularly ragged on the offense.

Game Arouses Interest.

Northern Virginia sandlot fans are aroused over Sunday's Post Association championship game between Manassas and Middleburg on the latter's field. Manassas took the first battle, 4 to 1. Both teams are expected to send their hurling aces, Dreyfuss and Furr, to the firing line Sunday.

Seek Sunday Game.

Brooke Grubb's Silver Spring Giants are seeking a game for Sunday with a fast unlimited team. Ballston A. C. and Alexandria Celtics are especially challenged. Call Silver Spring 117-M.

Episcopal High Wins Practice Tilt, 38-6

Displays Strong Attack in Swamping Training School Eleven.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—Episcopal High School romped through a light National Training School eleven in a practice game this afternoon, winning by a mythical score of 38-6. It was the first hand-to-hand combat of the season for both teams.

Episcopal displayed a strong running attack which the invaders were powerless to cope with. The Cherry and Black backs pounded away at the line for consistent gains, interspersed with spinners, double-reverses behind the line and end runs. Forward passes were used sparingly.

Two Slightly Hurt.

Wilson and Fleming, veteran linemen counted on as regulars again this season, were injured, though not seriously. Both are expected to play against Eastern High School Saturday.

For the first time in Episcopal's history three Alexandria boys are regulars. They are Bryant, full back; Burke and Hoxton, halves. Hoxton is the Hilltop school's best all-around athlete, holding the quarter-mile State scholastic record. He is considered one of the best prospective college gridders ever developed at Episcopal. He tips the scales at 182 pounds.

Undaunted by their 1-point defeat by Eastern, Alexandria High School gridmen were back at hard labor today preparing for Saturday's tilt with Central. Blocking was particularly stressed in the lengthy drill.

Coach Nick Colosanto drove the Frater semipro eleven through another gruelling drill tonight in preparation for Sunday's opening game of the season with the Meridian Athletic Club. Dick Allen, Ellet Cabell, Pepco Barry and Hardy Ginsmer have been selected for the starting back field, while the line will be composed of Bayliss, Williams, Studds, Brenner, Whitestone, Agner and Baber.

The Pirate grid team met tonight at Hayden's Field and went through a snappy signal drill under Coach "Coodles" Owens' direction. The club will drill every night this week.

Brewer Stars In G. W. U. Workout

Sophomore, Stealing Show, Likely to Start in Shepherd Game.

UNTIL yesterday "Touchdown Willie" Brewer, prize half back of last year's George Washington freshman team, never had a chance to do his stuff in actual combat. He was injured before scrimmaging started at training camp and had been on the sidelines until yesterday when he made his debut behind the line and stole the show—everything but the copyright on it.

Brewer, an 181-pound full back, smashed through the opposing freshmen as easily as though it were tissue paper. He drilled through the tackles, through the guards, over center for gains of 10-20-30 yards. He did everything asked of him and did it well. The stake was a starting role in Saturday's opening game with Shepherd.

Co-starring with Brewer was Tuffy Leemans, the eel-like half back, who roamed through broken fields for five touchdowns as easily as you walk down the street. Leemans was aided by good blocking, at the line of scrimmage and downfield. It was the best blocking G. W. has shown thus far.

On a basis of yesterday's performances the Colonial back field Saturday in all probability will be Brewer, full back; Ray Hanken and Leemans, halves, and Frank Kovalier, quarter back. This group worked with clock-like precision, going as far as they pleased when they pleased against the bewildered Frosh.

Arnold Benefield, end, will be out of Saturday's game with his broken nose. Dave Parrack, also injured at Camp Letts, was back for more yesterday, but escaped further damage. Frank Lee, a tackle, has been shifted to center and seems to like the change.

29 Series Shares Are Voted by Cubs

Liberal Split Decided Upon in Contrast to 1932.

Chicago, Sept. 24 (AP).—The third-place Cubs today voted to divide their portion of the world's series gate receipts into 29 full shares, a liberal split very much in contrast to the 1932 vote that caused their world's series opponents, the Yankees, that year to ridicule them continually as being "tight."

Catcher Benny Tate, who was given his unconditional release last month, and Don Hurst, Bob O'Farrell and Jim Weaver, who joined the club in midseason, each were awarded a full share, as were the 20 players who were with the team since spring. Coaches Barney Kelly and John Corriden, Road Secretary Bob Lewis, Trainer Andy Lotshaw and the clubhouse boy also were voted full shares.

Ruppert Pitches No-Hit Game.

Carl Ruppert pitched a no-hit game for Bethesda Midgets against the District Post nine, but faulty support prevented him from earning a shut-out. Bethesda won, 8 to 1.

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

"STATION WJSV—Alexandria, Va.," the announcement you've heard briskly and sonorously during various drousy hours of the dawn, will be two years old (under Columbia Broadcasting auspices) on October 20. So all the lads and lassies on the eighth floor of the Earle building will pool their energetic efforts for a gala, ear-soothing one-hour broadcast on that day . . . merely to confirm your suspicions that they're some station . . . and how!

Features, flash-backs, speeches and toasts . . . Godfrey, the demon slumber-breaker . . . McDonald, the valiant word-slasher . . . all will recall the climb that WJSV has bravely and successfully negotiated since the barnstorm, hit-or-miss days when their broadcasting antics were confined to one studio in the Shoreham Building and even office boys wrote script.

There'll be short flashes of "firsts" that WJSV has had locally, such as that three-way trio broadcast from three separate points . . . the battle of the starlings and others. District officials will speak. Original talent and artists who shared their first hopeful offering will take part.

TWO years ago WJSV, bought from James S. Vance, numbered the following personnel: Bob Trout, from the old WJSV; Jess Willard, from Baltimore; Warren Sweeney and Larry Elliott, from WMAL (then a Columbia station), announcers; Harry Butcher, manager; Ted Church, program director, and Ann Gillis, from newspaper work, publicity head. The control room managed to get programs on the air without much fuss under Les Bowman, manager; Clyde Hunt, Harold Forry, Earl Merryman, Marcellus Beal and William Kriz.

Since October 20, 1932, the Columbia lads and lassies have provided much entertainment both as to program and personality. Through their corridors, studios, halls, plush offices and control room have passed many world-famous figures. They've been pestered by radio editors, insurance salesmen, blue Mondays, stormy discussions and woeful sighs . . . but it all came out in the wash somehow . . . and today the squalling infant can be said to have emerged full blown, where even the New York office knows that big things are doing down in "that den of broadcasters" . . . WJSV!

JOHN McCORMACK's pleasingly informal concert will offer tonight at 8:30 o'clock on WMAL, "Sweetly She Sleeps," "In Dublin's Fair City," "Just for Today," "A Song Remembered," "Must I Go Bound," "The Slaney Side" and "Friend o' Mine." McCormack does not have a studio audience, preferring to sing solely for his radio listeners.

A WIDE variety of opinion on what's amiss with the arts and sciences, the criminal, our children, the changing status of the international woman and the undercurrent masses clamoring for cake, will be pretty much on N. B. C.'s air waves all day today and tomorrow.

T'will emanate from a conference on current problems, started by the New York Herald Tribune, in which the voices of many celebrated Americans, Germans, French and British will be heard.

Our President and his wife will open and close the conclave, while world-known figures in politics, literature, music, education and sociology will tell what they know about "Changing Standards." Among notable Americans to be heard are Attorney General Cummings, Will Irwin, Lawrence Tibbett, Pearl Buck, Glenn Frank, Govs. Ely and Winant, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt and Senator Robert M. La Follette.

By short wave from London and Paris will arrive the opinions of Lady Rhondda, British journalist; Frau Mathilde Wurm, former Reichstag member, and Mme. Paul Dupuy, French editor. Hugh Walpole's voice will echo from Hollywood; Senator La Follette's from Madison, Wis., and the President's from the White House.

The schedule (today): WRC, 9:30 a. m., Mrs. Roosevelt and others; 9:45 a. m., WMAL, Attorney General Cummings and others, discussing changing trends in crime. WMAL, 2:45 p. m., discussions of the arts with Mr. Irwin, Mr. Walpole and Mrs. Buck; WRC, 3:15 p. m., discussions on the stage, opera and architecture with Mr. Tibbett, Royal Cortissoz and Walter Pritchard Eaton. WMAL, 9:15 p. m., Senator La Follette, on "New Frontiers in Government." Tomorrow's line-up will be announced.

ARCH McDONALD, WJSV sports announcer, reveals another exclusive guest array for his spot today at 6 p. m. He'll have with him Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, captain of the United States women's golf team, and Miss Doris Chambers, captain of the British team, which engages the American players tomorrow at Chevy Chase.

QUEEN MARY, accompanied by King George, will do something today that her predecessor never did . . . at least not with the alarums and excursions attending the present instance. Her Majesty, the Queen, will shatter a bottle of effervescent beverage on the keen-edged prow of "534," Britain's latest monster craft, bidding for supremacy of the seas.

And the entire sun-studded empire will be listening in at 8:50 a. m. today as the British Broadcasting Co. relays a word picture of the event to both Columbia and National networks.

Just to be sure we Americans would be apprised of the program, the Cunard-White Star laddies printed up a nice yard-wide poster proclaiming the "radio treat of the decade," to be plaed in your window "where it will be seen by passersby."

N. B. C. and C. B. S. announce that the Queen will "pronounce the ship's new name as the mass of steel slides down the ways to the accompaniment of a tumult of cheering and shrieking whistles of river craft."

One of the most friendly handouts cruising in and out of our desk drawer since May 11 has been the cheery word that "the first broadcast by Queen Mary of England" would occur "symbolizing England's triumph over the depression."

There'll be plenty of splash, however, when the "534" glides into the waves . . . she was built for a mere $30,000,000 . . . to carry 4,000 guests . . . to cross the briny in four days . . . has 11 decks . . . 2,000 portholes and her promenade deck is 750 feet long.

"Box-Office Champions for August" Reflect Mass Taste Typical of "Dog Days"

Nine Pictures Outrank Field Of Minor Hits

Six Studios Represented; Mr. Benedict Pops In; Amusement Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Nine pictures were required to fill the five ranking positions among the films which the Motion Picture Herald's monthly tabulation of actual box-office receipts of the key-city theaters of the country determined to be the "Box-Office Champions of August."

The list is a little surprising. Included in it are one or two subjects, which in the opinion of Washington motion picture patrons and this commentator, have no business being rated so near the top. One, at least, that flopped here also "laid an egg," as the saying goes, at a popular shore resort where pictures of the better sort customarily "stand up" not less than a week, and from that up to a month or more in theaters of large capacity.

But there they all are—nine of 'em—by benefit of superior attendance and money in the bank for their producers and exhibitors. In the film industry, as at present organized, that is the acid test.

There can be little quibbling about the releases that occupy first, second and third places, undisputed. They are: "Treasure Island," with Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, first; Will Rogers in "Handy Andy," second; "Dames," with Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, et al, third. Even at that, there might be those to think that "Handy Andy" got up there largely on the strength of its star's past performances rather than its own intrinsic merit.

Many Are Tied.

Three pictures are tied for fourth place and three for fifth.

The stalemated trio that ran nearest to the money rankings are "She Loves Me Not," with Bing Crosby and Miriam Hopkins; "Down to Their Last Yacht," with Mary Boland, Sidney Blackmer and Polly Moran, and "The Old-Fashioned Way," starring W. C. Fields.

Running neck and neck in the last notch are "Whom the Gods Destroy," with Walter Connolly and Doris Kenyon; Jimmy Cagney, Pat O'Brien and Gloria Stewart in "Here Comes the Navy," and "Friends of Mr. Sweeney," with Charlie Ruggles and Ann Dvorak.

This recapitulation, it will be noted, gives first, second and third ratings, respectively, to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fox and Warners; of the remainder, two to Paramount, two more to Warners, one to Columbia and one to RKO-Radio. The Warners on the total count have considerably the best of a not especially distinguished situation.

Typical "Dog Days" Fare.

Just to prove that August "dog days" do not invite attention to the more ponderous commodities of the theater, it may be further ponited out that the list of nine champions is made up of one drama, one piratical melodrama, three straight comedies, two comedies with music and two musicals with comedy—typical "silly season" diversion.

September may reasonably be expected to reflect a more serious point of view. What with paying for August's vacation, and one thing and another, September is a pretty serious month!

Speaking of Mae West's new picture, "Belle of the Nineties," to be presented at the Earle Theater beginning Thursday midnight, as we were in this space yesterday, the unique performance of Duke Ellington and his famous orchestra in this bit of ribaldry, as well as in Earl Carroll's "Murder at the Vanities," has brought an offer from Paramount for the appearance of the Washington-born Harlemaestro in additional films of their contriving. Refusal of the British ministry to grant labor permits has upset plans for a return of the orchestra to Europe this fall, so at the conclusion of his current New England tour three weeks hence, the Duke and his sepia syncopators will begin a series of cross-country stage engagements that will eventually lead them back to the Hollywood studios. In the way of seductive melody and rhythm, Ellington's rendition of his own "Sophisticated Lady" is the fondest thing this column is of.

Gordon Gets Going.

Howard S. Benedict, one of the saner and more reliable of the theater's mouthpieces, whose forecasts of Max Gordon's plans and hopes for the new season—particularly as they pertain to Washington—have been reproduced here from time to time these past few days, during a pleasant call in person yesterday afternoon, went a trifle more into detail concerning one or two important impending events.

Among other things, Mr. Benedict entertains high expectations of the cordiality with which the National Capital will embrace Mr. Gordon's production of "The Farmer Takes a Wife," which will open the season at the National Theater with its world premiere on Monday night, October 8.

The collaboration of Marc Connelly, its director, upon the authorship of this play, which originally was Frank B. Elser's piece called "Low Bridge," came about wholly as a result of his enthusiasm over the Elser script when it came to his attention. He sat in with Mr. Elser and revised it upward slightly, one is led to believe, from the high level of excellence which it already occupied.

Mr. Benedict discloses that the time of the play is set in the year 1853, when the Erie Canal was reluctantly beginning to yield to an innovation known as the railroad as the chief artery of travel and transportation between the Eastern seaboard and the Middle West. It is a period rich in tradition and the elements of stirring drama.

That Dancing Justice.

One also is reminded in discussing these things with Mr. Gordon's ebullient emissary that the Ralph Biggs in the cast with June Walker and Herb Williams is the same agile comedian who was the dancing Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court in "Of Thee I Sing" and "Let 'Em Eat Cake," those two roistering burlesques of the Federal Establishment and its conduct by President Wintergreen and Vice President Alexander Throttlebottom.

Apart from the Gordon enterprises that immediately concern Washington's new season, Mr. Benedict had interesting things to say of other productions already launched by his sagacious boss.

For instance, "The Great Waltz," which opened in the 3,700-seat Center Theater in New York last Saturday night, seems to have borrowed something of Busby Berkeley's movie technique. That is to say, when its final climax is reached, a 54-piece orchestra is elevated miraculously into the air, walls and furniture fall away, imposing columns move in and the operetta ends with a spectacular magnificence that is unprecedented, with the number which seemingly thousands join in dancing the imperishable Strauss "Blue Danube Waltz."

The morning critics all thought this was very elegant stuff; the afternoon boys and girls were not so sure. The public, it seems, sides with the matutinal opinion.

Tragedy No Handicap.

Then there is Mr. Gordon's "Spring Song," starring Francine Larrimore, last seen here in S. N. Behrman's "Brief Moment," the medium of Alexander Woollcott's introduction as a recumbent actor, which opened to high acclaim in Philadelphia on Monday night.

Because "Spring Song" ends tragically with the death of its heroine on stage in plain view of the audience, Mr. Gordon was assured that the public would have none of it and it is to be suspected that during its preparatory weeks the temptation has been pretty strong now and again to withdraw it from circulation and forget all about it.

Imagine the thrill to all concerned to awaken to the realization that, according to the Philadelphia verdict, they have a hit on their hands!

No less is expected of "The Farmer Takes a Wife" when it reopens at the National in a fortnight.

While we are on the topic of new plays, Paul Guilfoyle and Edward McNamara have been added to the cast of "Jayhawker." This is the drama by Sinclair Lewis and Lloyd Lewis booked to follow "The Farmer Takes a Wife" at the National the week of October 15, with Fred Stone in the stellar role and his daughter, Carol, featured. Settings for "Jayhawker" are being designed by Walter Walden, and Joe Losey is directing. Walden and Helen Grayson are jointly designing the costumes. This Henry Hammond, Inc., production will continue on the road for two weeks following the Washington engagement before opening in New York early in November.

Optimism Note.

The Era, Great Britain's "official organ of entertainment," in a three-column, black face, Gothic head, denominates the distribution of 14 Gaumont-British motion picture productions in this country—dwelt upon at some length in this column weeks ago—as a "FILM CONQUEST OF AMERICA."

It would be nice if they would bring over an automobile for us to see, too!

Transfers Talents to Screen

A striking new camera study of Tamara Geva, Russian actress, better known on the stage of the living theater than upon the shadow stage of the cinema. Geva, however, has succumbed to the lure of the celluloids and is now engaged in an important film for RKO-Radio, "Their Big Moment." Many will detect a remarkably close resemblance to Norma Talmadge in this picture of the Russian artiste.

Escaped Felon, Kidnaping Two, Falls Into Trap

Dual Abduction, Second in 4 Days, Foiled by California Police.

Oakland, Calif., Sept. 25 (AP). John Baldwin, Missouri jailbreaker, who was trapped by police here while he was busy with his second double abduction within four days, was started today on the long trail down which California has been sending her kidnapers lately.

Without waiting to determine whether Missouri authorities would claim him, Oakland prosecutors announced he would be charged with kidnaping and robbery.

The new State law provides a penalty of death if the kidnaping victim is harmed, and a maximum of life imprisonment without parole chances if the abducted person is not hurt.

It took just one police tear gas bomb to bag the 19-year-old toter of many pistols. The officers located his room and waylaid him as he was about to make a getaway late last night with Miss Marjory Evans, 21, and her escort, W. R. McKane, as hostages.

Baldwin tried to escape via the fire escape, but when a policeman appeared at the window ledge he surrendered.

Baldwin and his pal, George Gilbert Alton, of Uxbridge, Mass., escaped from jail in St. Joseph, Mo., a month ago with two other prisoners. Alton was captured by Los Angeles police in a gun fight and is being held there.

Baldwin fled to Oakland by kidnaping Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Stratton in Glendale and forcing them to drive here with him last Friday night. Carrying eight guns, he jumped from the Stratton car here Saturday, eluded police and hid out in a hotel room.

The hotel proprietor became suspicious, looked at the room while Baldwin was absent yesterday and found seven guns. Police came, took five of the weapons, left the other two, unloaded, and lay in wait.

Straight From the Studios

Novarro Becomes Full-Fledged Mexican Ranchero; Mr. Baxter's Man's Man Doubles With a Vengeance; Pot-Shots and Shrapnel Fired From Coast.

By Speed Kendall.

Hollywood, Sept. 25.—Ramon Novarro—rancher and cattleman. Dreams of a lifetime will come true for Ramon when he arrives at Durango, Mex., and signs papers and turns over cash that will make him owner of a fully improved 12,000-acre ranch. Novarro left yesterday by plane for Mexico City, where he will take part in the dedication ceremonies of the Mexican National Theater, which has been under construction for the past 25 years at a cost of $25,000,000.

NOVARRO.

Immediately following his participation in this celebration, Novarro will hurry to Durango, where he was born, to take possession of his ranch, which adjoins an acreage belonging to his uncle. He will devote his time to raising cattle and sheep and ranch products. Ever since he was a youth, Ramon has looked forward to the day when he could have a ranch of his own. His picture career netted him the funds for the realization. As soon as he returns from Mexico in two or three weeks, Novarro will take steps either to lease or sell his valuable Los Felix District home.

While he is engaged in films, he will reside in an apartment, and commute to his ranch between pictures. He is due to make "The Night Is Young," at M-G-M next. On finishing this he will go right back to Durango to direct development of his holdings.

Doubling For Sure.

Warner Baxter's man, Frankie McGrath, is an all-around Handy-Andy. He serves as stand-in, valet, chauffeur and what-not. His boss, busy starring in "Hell in the Heavens," has signed and paid for daily tennis instruction. Unable to leave the set, Baxter sent McGrath to take a tennis lesson for him and to come back and tell him what he had learned. McGrath wasn't too well pleased, and when he returned, worn and perspiring, he suggested to Baxter that if he wanted him to substitute for him again why couldn't it be a banquet. Baxter fixed that. He dispatched McGrath to Santa Monica and made him read a speech for him at a service club luncheon.

She Won't Explain.

Superstitious or not, Anna May Wong went into conniptions when she walked into the Paramount restaurant yesterday and counted noses at a table she had arranged for a farewell luncheon to a group of writers and secretaries. Including herself, there were 13 plates. She refused to sit down until a fourteenth chair had been placed. Miss Wong gave the luncheon on finishing her role in "Limehouse Nights." She leaves soon for Chicago, New York, London and Italy.

Odd and Interesting People and Events.

Resigned to continued postponements of her European trip, Barbara Kent forgets by playing 36 holes of golf every day. . . . Ralph Bellamy is on his way home from London and New York. . . . Richard Dix gets up every day at 4 a. m., to go on location and does not get back home again until 10 p. m. . . . Kay Francis isn't the only one to have babies named after her. Una Merkel and Myrna Loy both got letters yesterday from New York to notify them of the same honor. . . . Adrienne Ames will live in the mansion occupied by Douglas Fairbanks while she is picture-making in London. . . . It broke Guy Kibbee's heart when he had to cancel his fishing expedition to Klamath Falls with Oliver Hardy. . . . But his stipend for personal appearances in New York, Washington and Philadelphia was too flattering.

Chivalry plus.—Wallace Beery walked into the M-G-M commissary when a waitress admired a brilliant blue sweater he was wearing and remarked she would like to have one too. Beery pulled it over his shoulders and presented her with it . . . She kept it . . . Producer Sam Bischoff and Mrs. Bischoff got back from Honolulu yesterday . . . Wesley Ruggles' little son visited him on the "College Rhythm" set yesterday . . . Claudette Colbert and the Paul Lukas played tennis at the former's home yesterday . . . Helen Mack is spending all her spare time at the beach . . . Julian Madison moved into a new home on Beachwood drive . . . And, by the way, Ted Fio-Rito returns to the Grove Monday night with a lavish entertainment set-up, including Kearney Walton, tenor; Johnny Candido, Muzzy Marcellino, the Campbell Twins, Frank Rapile, Louis Chico, Cy Bernard, Baron and Blair and the Three Debutantes.

Renovated Men's Shop Is Reopened by Hahn's

Hahn's men's shop, Fourteenth and G streets, was reopened formally yesterday, following a complete overhauling and expansion. The salesroom has been air-conditioned, and the interior and exterior have been done over in modernistic fashion.

New furnishings have been supplied to fit into the atmosphere of the renovated store.

Hit Me When I Wasn't Looking, Socked Actor's Reply to Socker

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 25 (AP).—The dove of peace kept away from filmland's latest fisticuffs feud today.

Marshall, who was on the receiving end of the only blow delivered, gave his version today of the fracas that disrupted Director Ernst Lubitsch's party for the European producer.

Saunders, husband of Fay Wray, film actress, who was with him at the party, had said the fight started when Marshall, seated at a table with Gloria Swanson, Myron Selznick, film agent; Ernest Vajda, writer, and himself, made "personal remarks."

"He called me a name and he didn't smile," said Saunders. "There was nothing else I could do but hit him. I'm very fond of Mr. Marshall and I'm sorry I had to do it, but I had no alternative. I'm also sorry I spoiled Mr. Myron Selznick's pants by spilling coffee and raspberry ice on them and I'm willing to have them cleaned for him."

Marshall said: "I can only say that Mr. Monk Saunders' statement is the best proof to date that he is a writer of melodramatic fiction. I can quite understand why in making his statement he preferred fiction to fact, inasmuch as the truth would compel him to admit that I was seated at the time he delivered his spectacular blow and looking in the opposite direction."

Marshall was floored by Saunders' punch. Miss Wray helped Gloria Swanson and others get the actor to his feet.

With serious mien this quartet is planning for the St. Elizabeth's Hospital employes' dance to be a success. Left to right the committee members are Mrs. Mabel Barrett, Albert Hayden, Mrs. Alice Summers and Francis D. Stewart, all members of St. Elizabeth's Lodge, No. 28, American Federation of Government Employes. The dance will be held on October 5 at Congress Heights Auditorium.

HOPES of more than 1,400 employes of the new Alcohol Tax Unit of Internal Revenue who will be dismissed under the McKellar rider to the Emergency Appropriation act on December 31 are turning to the White House.

BAKER

As the McKellar rider cuts these employes off Treasury funds, an appeal is expected to be made to President Roosevelt to allot the salaries from PWA funds by executive order until Congress can repeal the law.

One group, believing that their Internal Revenue jobs are as good as gone December 31, is striving to get on the preferred Civil Service lists from which the Census Bureau will draw 1,800 workers for the Washington staff when the Agricultural count gets under way, beginning in November.

However, President Roosevelt will not stand by and see the Civil Service dealt a staggering blow, it is the prevalent opinion of the employe leaders. Already the more than 1,400 in Washington and approximately 400 additional employes in the field and friends, relatives and civic leaders throughout the country are bombarding their members of Congress with protests against the ousting of this large bloc of merit-system qualified workers.

Inaugurating a fall schedule of programs at the John Dickson Home, 5000 Fourteenth street northwest, John A. Smith, Records Division, General Accounting Office, will present a concert at 7:45 p. m. today. Among the soloists who will appear with the Vaughn Class Orchestra (Calvary Baptist Sunday School) will be Irwin Fass, pianist. The public is invited.

Commander, Robert R. Spriggs, electrical engineer, Bureau of Safety; second vice commander, John Weitzell, Section of Tariffs, Bureau of Traffic; third vice commander, Max Meyers, chief clerk, Bureau of Service; finance officer, Grover Tribble, Government Printing Office; color bearer, Harry Blair, Bureau of Traffic; historian, Jeremiah Dullea, Section of Tariffs, Bureau of Traffic; judge advocate, Willie Leo Collins, assistant purchasing agent, Bureau of Administration; quartermaster, Harry J. Barnholdt, General Accounting Office, and adjutant, L. J. P. Fichthorn (*), attorney-examiner, Bureau of Formal Cases.

IF YOUR name is followed by (*), call in person on the Federal Diary editor. You will receive tickets to Lowe's Fox (stage, Arthur Godfrey, Pat Rooney, 24 ballet girls and other acts; screen, Janet Gaynor and Lew Ayres in "Servants Entrance"); or to Loew's Palace (Norma Shearer and Fredric March in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street"); or to Loew's Columbia (Joan Crawford and Clark Gable in "Chained").

Diary office hours are: Daily, except Sunday, 12 noon to 1 p. m. and from 4:30 to 6 p. m., Saturday, 12 noon to 2:30 p. m.

Samuel C. Caldwell (*), Identification Unit, Justice, who was selected as the typical young North Carolinian in Government service in the Federal Diary's Parade of the States last spring, was honored last night at a ball and ceremony at Wardman Park. Mr. Caldwell presided at the affair, which was under auspices of the North Carolina State Society, with Miss Margaret Richardson, of Raleigh, who was recently named "Miss North Carolina."

Veterans Administration Bowling.

With Adelbert D. Hiller, executive assistant to Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans affairs, rolling the first ball, the Veterans Administration Bowling League opened its fourteenth season last night.

Arthur Brousseau is president of the nine-team league. William Share is vice president and the secretary-treasurer and official scorer is Sol Rosenblatt.

This league always has produced many close battles for the championship. Last year the winner was not decided until the last game was rolled. The Convention Hall alleys, at Fifth and K streets northwest, will be the battle ground every Tuesday night this season.

As in the last few years, Mickey Barron's Converted Insurance Team is entering the race as a strong favorite, having acquired great strength through the enlistment of Johnny Coggins and Bill Perry, former Cadiz (Ohio) champion.

The teams and captains are:

Converted Insurance, Mickey Barron (*); Term Insurance, William (Buck) Share; Board of Appeals, Benjamin F. Taylor; Adjudicators, George Hunter; Construction, George Williams; Finance, Frederick Shumaker; Adjusted Compensation, George Houff; Chief Clerk's, Howard Finnell, and Pensions, J. J. Crowley.

Net change in the Civil Service Reemployment Register last week is reported at zero by the Civil Service Commission. Names of 19 persons were removed from the list, while 19 were added—10 in Washington and 9 in the field. Of the total of 656 remaining on the list, 197 are reported as serving in temporary positions.

Radio Permit Granted Piccard for Flight

The Federal Communications Commission yesterday granted applications by the stratosphere balloonist, Jean Felix Piccard, to operate a special radio transmitter and a ground station at Dearborn, Mich., during his flight there, the Associated Press said.

Piccard said in his application that the Ford Motor Co. would bear the cost of operating the system. The balloon transmitter will operate on 2 watts and wave lengths of 56,000 and 60,000 kilocycles. Its call signal will be W10XDV. The ground station's call letters are W8XCN.

Dillinger Gang Has a Birthday; 2 Dead, 5 Jailed

3 Still Free; Formation of Mob Launched Year of Many Crimes.

Michigan City, Ind., Sept. 25 (AP). A year crowded with crime has elapsed since ten convicts escaped from the Indiana State Prison here and formed the Dillinger gang.

But the close of the 12 months finds two of the felons dead, five in prison and three at large.

It was on September 26, 1933, that the ten men escaped through the prison's front gate and embarked on a series of murders, bank robberies, jail deliveries and raids on police arsenals.

The gang's activities caused the massing of Federal and State law enforcement agencies in a hunt that extended throughout the Nation and which cost many thousands of dollars and the lives of not less than 18 persons.

Dillinger, in jail at Lima, Ohio, awaiting trial on a bank robbery charge, was set free a few weeks after the prison escape by alleged members of the gang. In effecting Dillinger's delivery they shot and killed Sheriff Jess Sarber.

The three felons still free are John Hamilton, who became one of Dillinger's chief lieuteriants and who now is the object of a widespread hunt by Federal officers; John Burns and Joseph Fox. No trace of the latter two has ever been found.

As for the other seven they have been accounted for as follows:

James Clark, captured at Hammond, Ind., on September 29, 1933.

Walter Detrich, captured at Chicago on January 6, 1934.

Charles Makley, captured at Tucson, Ariz., January 25, 1934, and sentenced to die in Ohio for the murder of Sheriff Sarber, but killed September 22 in an attempt to escape from his death cell.

Harry Pierpont, captured at Tucson and now awaiting execution for the killing of Sheriff Sarber. He was wounded Saturday in the attempted prison break in which Makley was killed.

Russell Lee Clark, captured at Tucson and now serving a life term in the Ohio Penitentiary for the murder of Sheriff Sarber.

Dillinger was killed in Chicago July 22.

Prince Jailed for Recklessness.

Vienna, Sept. 25 (AP).—Prince Rudolf Windisch-Graetz, grandson of the late Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria, was sentenced to eight weeks' imprisonment today for reckless driving.

Shepard Murder Trial Delay Refused by Court

Denver, Sept. 25 (AP).—Federal Judge John C. Pollock today overrued a Government motion to delay retrial of Maj. Charles Shepard on a charge of poisoning his second wife, Mrs. Zenana Shepard, until the body of his first wife Mrs. Clara Shepard, could be exhumed.

At the first trial, the prosecution contended that the Army tuberculosis specialist poisoned his second wife because he desired to marry his stenographer, Miss Grace Brandon.

Stocks Capture Largest Gains Since August 9

Old Time Leaders Join Rally; Sales Rise to 839,085 Shares.

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Speculative markets took a new lease on life today and staged their best recovery in several weeks.

Stocks, staples and secondary bonds after early hesitancy stepped forward briskly in the late afternoon and converted losses into substantial gains. In some quarters technical factors were given the credit. Sentiment, however, was noticeably improved in all sectors.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 selected shares recorded a net advance of 1.9 points, the largest day's gain since August 9. The turnover totaled 839,085 shares, which was the most sizeable volume since August 22.

Brokerage Circles Heartened.

Brokerage circles were heartened also by the fact that many of the old-time stock leaders were in the vanguard of the rally with gains ranging from 1 to 3 or more points.

Among the more favored equity issues were U. S. Steel, common and preferred; American Telephone, Union Pacific, Santa Fe, N. Y. Central, Bethlehem Steel, Chrysler, General Motors, Consolidated Gas, Du Pont, Goodyear, International Harvester, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, R. H. Macy, Case, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, Schenley, U. S. Rubber, Westinghouse, Western Union and Public Service of New Jersey.

That the reversal of trend in the various markets was not associated with any revival of inflationary psychology appeared to be indicated by the exceptional strength of the dollar in terms of leading foreign exchanges.

British Pound Off.

The British pound, for instance, was off nearly 2 cents at one time and reached its lowest level since February. French francs and the other European gold currencies also exhibited the heaviest tone in months. In connection with the pronounced decline in the foreign currencies banking quarters heard reports that the British were buying dollars. The deduction here was that the Bank of England must be fairly well convinced that further devaluation of the American monetary units was not to be expected soon.

The feeling in Wall Street seems to be that the Administration is preparing to turn to the "right" and reassure business on the matter of profits.

The weekly statement of reporting Federal Reserve members in 91 cities showed that "all other," or commercial loans, were up some $11,000,000 on the week, but that loans on securities were down about $87,000,000.

Moderate Price Changes Point Upward in Leading Products

Reopening of Mills Is Expected to Help Demand Increase; Corn, Oats and Rye Sell Slightly Higher; Wheat Is Unsettled; Cotton Declines.

(U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Bureau of Economics.)

Price changes in leading farm products have been moderate since the middle of September, but mostly in upward direction. There were small net losses in spot cotton the third week of the month. Reopening of mills was expected to help demand. Corn, oats and rye sold a little higher. Wheat prices were unsettled with hesitaing foreign markets. Shortage prevents any real weakness in the domestic grain position. Slackening of demand with improving pasture conditions unsettled the feed market.

Live stock prices gained at Chicago. Hides sold slightly higher and the wool market was firm. Butter advanced about 1 cent with good demand.

Cheese values were fully maintained. Egg markets were irregular but supported by strong underlying conditions. Poultry markets were fairly steady. Fruits and vegetables showed mixed price action, but mostly downward, with sharp changes on leading lines.

Cotton Prices Decline.

Prices of spot cotton, after rather wide fluctuations, was selling in late September not far from the midmonth level. Factors favoring higher prices were the settlement of the textile strike, increased holding on the part of farmers, and firm cotton cloth prices.

Features contributing to lower prices were improved weather conditions, particularly in Texas and Oklahoma, and lagging exports. Current improvement in general business activity, doubtless means additional purchasing power available for cotton goods and an increased use of cotton in those industries using cotton or cotton goods in their manufacturing processess.

Wheat Is Unsettled.

The general wheat market position turned somewhat unsettled in late September, influenced by more favorable conditions for seeding winter wheat in the United States, increased offerings for January and February shipment of new crop South American wheat to Liverpool and a continued slow demand from importing areas.

This situation in turn was a weakening factor in domestic markets since prices of several classes of wheat are on an export basis. Domestic cash wheat markets were generally slightly firmer than futures, although milling demand was less urgent as a result of some slackening in the flour trade. Marketings of spring wheat were only moderate. Marketings of winter wheat fell off sharply. Rye markets also were quite unsettled. Strengthening influence of prospective short domestic supplies was counterbalanced by prospective imports of foreign grain.

Domestic cash markets made small net gains. Corn markets were independently firm, influenced by smaller country marketings, prospective short supplies of feed grains and a fairly active inquiry for current offerings. The new crop is reported now safe from frost damage in many sections in the Ohio Valley but in Western areas nearly another month will be required to mature the crop. Oats markets were generally steady or slightly higher, influenced by the strength in corn. Barley markets declined with supplies fairly liberal and demand less urgent.

Feed Market Eased Off.

Feed markets turned slightly weaker the third week of September, as demand slackened with further improvement in late pasturage and forage. Eastern markets displayed greater weakness than those in or near central Western drought areas, while Pacific Coast markets continued firm.

Wheat feeds were most affected by the slack demand and prices declined $1 to $1.50 per ton. Cottonseed and linseed feeds were about steady, although declines were noted at some points. Corn feeds were firm and in good demand with hominy feed quoted slightly higher in Central Western markets.

Feed prices have declined 3 per cent, compared with prices early in the month, but are still nearly 50 per cent higher than they were in late September last year, and hay prices have doubled, as compared with a year ago.

Live Stock Mostly Higher.

The fed steer and yearling market advanced 50 cents or more. Medium and good grade steers of all weights were steady to 25 cents higher, but common grassy kinds were mostly 25 cents lower. Best light steers sold up to $10.75 and yearlings to $10. The supply of feeder and stocker cattle was the largest of the season. Prices of the better grades held steady. Price trends in the Chicago hog market were little changed.

Recent top of $7.50 compared with $7.25 the week before, $5.45 a year earlier, and $4.60 for the corresponding week of 1932. New crop hogs were more plentiful, and fewer packing sows arrived. Many new crop hogs were well finished, but there were also many thin lightweights. The fat lamb market ranged 50 to 75 cents higher than a week earlier. The quality of the range run was necessarily variable as shipments arrived from all the Northwestern range States. Better grade feeding lambs were mostly steady in price.

Only scattered lots of spot Western grown wools in Boston were moved. Quotations remained unchanged. A limited amount of business was reported on average 12 months Texas wools offered for the country at around 60 cents scoured basis, delivered East.

Bonds Stage Slight Rally; Federals Fall

Prime Investments Are Dull; Sales Decline to $10,740,000.

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—A smart rally in lower-priced issues featured the bond market today. Prime investments were dull and narrow and U. S. Governments were mostly a trifle lower.

Transfers approximated $10,740,000 par value, compared with $11,382,000 on Monday.

The turnover in Governments aggregated $1,490,000, compared with $3,900,000 the day before. The Standard Statistics Co. average of 60 domestic corporate bonds advanced one-tenth of a point to 83.1.

Make Sharp Comeback.

After following an irregular course in forenoon trading, secondary rails, utilities and industrials made a sharp comeback in the final hour of trading along with substantial improvement in stocks.

International Telephone 5s gained 3⅛ points to 61½ and the 4½s were 3¼ higher at 57½. Southern Pacific 4½s improved 3½ at 60 and advances of 1 to 2 points were recorded by some obligations of Baltimore & Ohio, Boston & Maine, Chicago Great Western, St. Paul, Rock Island, Erie, Great Northern, Illinois Central, Missouri Pacific, New York Central, New Haven, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway and Western Union.

Some irregularity appeared in first-grade corporate issues. American Sugar Refining 6s yielded ¼, at 106¼; American Telephone deb. 5s were ¾ higher, at 109, and C. & O. 4½s were ⅛ lower, at 101⅝.

Slight Gains Recorded.

Slightly higher levels were made by some issues of Consolidated Gas, B. F. Goodrich, Louisville & Nashville and Public Service G. and E., while fractional losses occurred in some of the Pennsylvania bonds, Northern Ohio Light & Traction, New York Edison, Cleveland Union Terminal and Canadian Pacific Railway.

The U. S. Government list was extremely sluggish. With one exception, all of the Liberty bonds were minor fractions lower and 7 out of 11 Treasuries were 1-32d to 4-32ds off. Federal Farm Mortgage 3½s yielded nearly ½ point, to 98.21, and the other issue was 3-32ds lower. Home Owners bonds were little changed.

The foreign section was lifeless. German issues were higher and Japanese 5½s advanced 2 points, to 80.

Curb Pushes Up Decisively In Late Sales

Trend Gains Momentum as Transfers Rise to 153,000 Shares.

Advances of fractions to a point or more predominated at the finish. Volume stepped up appreciably on the rally.

At the opening prices were about even, but later irregularity developed. The list stiffened in the fourth hour and the upward trend gained momentum in the closing dealings.

Singer Manufacturing added 5 points to recent sharp gains, closing at 190, a new high for the year. Utilities were prominent on the upturn, Electric Bond & Share, Commonwealth Edison and American Gas & Electric all showing appreciation of a point or so.

Other issues finishing up major fractions to around a point included Aluminum Co. of America, American Cyanamid B, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, South Pennsylvania Oil, Hiram Walker, International Petroleum, Pioneer Gold, Sherwin Williams, Gulf Oil, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Swift & Co., Swift International, United Shoe Machinery, New Jersey Zinc, Lake Shore and Pepperell Manufacturing.

Wheat Renews Climb Under Buying Rush

Oversold Condition Indicated as All Grains Join in Advance.

Chicago, Sept. 25 (AP).—Right-about-face action of the grain markets late today, and an outburst of general buying turned losses into brisk advances.

Paucity of offerings in the last hour indicated that both wheat and corn here had become oversold.

A disposition to rally shown by Argentine wheat prices helped to restore confidence, which had been badly shaken earlier by sharp fresh breaks in Buenos Aires quotations tumbling Argentine wheat to the lowest point since August 6, with a total decline since then of 22½ cents.

Wheat Closes Firm.

Wheat in Chicago closed firm, ⅝ to 1¼ above yesterday's finish; December new, 104⅛ to ¾; corn 1 to 1¾ up; oats, unchanged to ¼ higher, and provisions varying from 25 cents decline to a rise of 2 cents.

The fact that spot delivery of corn commanded today the highest premium reached yet this season did much toward the last to impart strength to all corn values, and to help rally wheat.

Wet weather over sections of the corn belt caused apprehension in regard to conditions of the new corn crop. Active buying in wheat as well as in corn during the last hour was also stimulated through notice taken of upturns of securities at New York.

Rallies Succeed Losses.

Recovery of grain values came only after early fresh downturns of Buenos Aires wheat prices had disturbed the entire world's markets for cereals. Liverpool reported heavy liquidation of wheat holdings there, and many stop-losses selling orders executed.

It was pointed out that almost one-third of the world shipments of wheat this week had come from Argentina, a circumstance attributed to large surplus supplies there and absence of adequate storage facilities. Furthermore, it was announced the Argentine government had reduced official prices of wheat 4 per cent, making possible a New York delivery of Argentine wheat duty paid at $1.10 a bushel, against No. 2 Red United States wheat quoted at $1.14 New York. Such factors, however, were practically ignored as the day drew to an end.

Corn was in persistent demand on the late rally. Shipping call for corn here was better. Oats followed corn.

Consumers Prod Output, Survey Shows

By Claude A. Jagger.

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Evidence accumulated this week that the insistent consumer is prodding sluggish industry into seasonal expansion of output.

Continued reports of better than expected retail trade, increased orders in wholesale markets, together with a marked pick-up in the movement of merchandise freight, and further expansion in the volume of bank clearings, combine to indicate that goods are going into consumption faster than they are being produced.

Industry remains quiescent. Such seasonal revival as has appeared has been rather feeble. The end of the textile strike lifted hopes of an early rift in the strike clouds, however.

Effects of Business.

Effects of the strike became more conspicuous in business and trade reports. Dun & Bradstreet said "acute shortages of many textile items rapidly is turning the dry goods division (of the wholesale market) into a seller's market."

And according to Cram's Automotive Reports, the strike became a factor in the decrease in automobile production, as the curtailment by the Ford Motor Co. was attributed in part to body shortages created by a lack of materials.

Steel output has recovered to the levels of mid-August. Last week's schedules called for a rate of 22.3 per cent of capacity, up 1.4 percentage points from the previous week, attributed to a little pickup in demand from miscellaneous manufacturing sources, larger construction awards for public projects, and some inclination on the part of producers to build up inventories.

Auto Output in Lull.

But automobile output, according to Cram, has gone further into its pre-new model lull. Output for the week was estimated at 38,329 units, off 4,631 from the previous week, and as much as 9,320 units under the total for the same week of 1933. Retail sales were said to have tapered off, after holding up well for the preceding three weeks.

The movement of freight, now approaching its autumn peak, showed a larger than seasonal gain over the Labor Day holiday week. The total cars loaded for the period ended September 15 was 645,986, a new high for the year, 83,256 over the holiday week, and only 14,100 cars under the like week of last year.

Electric power production, however, failed by a substantial margin to register the usual seasonal increase over the holiday week, and the total was 1.8 per cent under the like week of 1933.

Federal Expenditures Aid.

Business still leans heavily on huge Federal expenditure. This was particularly notable in the F. W. Dodge report of building contracts let in the States east of the Rockies for August. The total of $120,268,500 was a little over July, and as much as 13½ per cent over August of last year, but publicly financed projects accounted for more than half the total.

Residential contracts were less than in either the previous month or the like month of last year.

Standard Statistics Co., in its weekly business survey, said Government spending appeared to be an important factor in the good volume of retail trade, and added "present indications are that Federal outlays will average close to $400,000,000 monthly during the remainder of 1934, or virtually three times those of the same period of 1933."

FCA Loans Obviate Taking Over Farms

7,275 Properties Reclaimed for Owners; Tax Sales Redeemed.

As a result of loans closed by the land bank commissioner since the organization of the Farm Credit Administration, approximately 7,275 farms have been repossessed by their owners, according to a statement issued by W. I. Myers, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, here yesterday. Of this number, 3,560 represent redemption from tax sales; 2,084, repurchased; 1,512, redemption after foreclosure of a first mortgage, and 110 after foreclosure of a second mortgage.

The statement says that the number of tax-sale redemptions was unusually large in the States of Mississippi and California and that most of the redemption in these States occurred after January 1, 1934. Illinois also shows a relatively large number of tax redemptions.

Redemptions from foreclosures as well as repurchase of farm property were unusually frequent in the seventh district, which covers Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota and North Dakota. There were also many repurchases in the third district covering the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida and also in California.

Currency Coverage Of Reichsbank Rises

Berlin, Sept. 25 (AP).—It was unofficially announced today that the currency coverage in the Reichsbank increased last week by .05 per cent to 2.2 per cent. Gold reserves increased 20,000 marks (about $8,000) and foreign exchange holdings increased 53,000 marks (about $21,200).

G. A. Topper Appointed.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—Walter D. Peddicord, new superintendent of the Hagerstown division of the Western Maryland Railway Co., announced the appointment of G. A. Topper, formerly trainmaster of the Elkins division of the same railroad, as trainmaster of the Hagerstown division, a position which Peddicord held before his promotion.

DICK TRACY — The Ways of Science

SINCE IT WOULD RUIN THE SMALL PIECES OF PAPER STICKING TO THE FLY-PAPER TO TRY TO PULL THEM LOOSE - AND SINCE ANY SOLVENT STRONG ENOUGH TO DISSOLVE THEM FREE FROM THE FLY CATCHING MIXTURE WOULD REMOVE THE WRITING ON THEM, TRACY HAS DECIDED TO MAKE USE OF THE X-RAY. . . .
YES, JUNIOR - PROF. HINSON IS MAKING AN X-RAY PHOTO OF THE SHEET OF FLY-PAPER.
THERE'S THE PLATE, TRACY.
NOW, PROFESSOR - GIVE US A SHARP PHOTO-PAPER PRINT FROM THAT PLATE.
20 MINUTES LATER..
THAT'S YOUR PRINT.
NOW, JUNIOR - WE'RE GOING TO CUT THOSE SCRAPS OF PAPER OUT OF THIS PRINT, PIECE THEM TOGETHER - AND WE'LL BE ABLE TO READ THE NOTE THAT THAT STRANGE WOMAN THREW OUT OF THE WINDOW!

Walt Mason Himself

Fast or Slow.

When autos were a new invention we loitered down the lanes and aisles, and cops used words unfit to mention when someone hit up twenty miles. How often was I stopped and roasted and threatened with the donjon keep, when down some windswept hill I coasted at speeds that made the peeler weep. "You're breaking speed laws good and plenty," the cop would say, "you make me fret; the man who hits up more than twenty becomes a menace and a threat." In those slow times the moral papers reproached the speeders every day, denounced their mad and maudlin capers that filled with grief the public way. In time the limit rose to thirty, responsive to the public need, but anyone was base and dirty who would exceed such frightful speed. But still the public grew more sporty, and feet pressed harder on the gas, the limit then was raised to forty and you could see the autos pass like meteors that fall from heaven and whiz like lightning through the dark, and if you hit up forty-seven it would occasion no remark. I learned to drive when cars went slowly, and do not like this modern gait; I think I do a thing unholy when I go up to twenty-eight. My friends and neighbors used to praise me for being such a careful wight, but now they stand around and haze me and say my driving is a fright. The copper wears no smile seraphic when he stands by my car and cries, "Go on, you're blocking all the traffic! The snail-like driver I despise!"

Hans Wagner, one of the greatest shortstops of all time and one of the best baserunners and hitters in big league history, was the only player who ever stole three bases in a single World Series game. He set the record during the 1909 series against the Detroit Tigers, when the Pirates won in seven games.

Two pints of like fluids will make a quart, but when alcohol and water are mixed—one pint of each—the resultant mixture does not equal a quart. This is due to the fact that water and alcohol are mutually soluble.

Why the Vienna Coup?

The squeeze is based on the principle that two hands, at any given stage of the play, can hold more cards than one. It is clearly essential, if the squeezer's cards are to be available for use, that there must be a means of communication between the two squeezing hands and that in order to cash one of the intended winners it does not become necessary to sacrifice another. A play often used to guard against this contingency is the Vienna Coup, which, in order to prevent one high card from shutting out another, sets up a card in the hand of the intended squeezee. For instance:

North, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ A 10 7 ♡ J 9 7 ◇ A 5 3 ♣ A Q 9 8
♠ 9 6 3 ♡ 10 5 ◇ K Q J 6 4 ♣ 7 6 5	N W E S	♠ K J 5 2 ♡ 8 ◇ 10 9 8 7 ♣ K 10 4 2
	♠ Q 8 4 ♡ A K Q 6 4 3 2 ◇ 2 ♣ J 3

I will not recount the bidding, as it was distinctly bad and, for my present purpose, beside the point. Suffice to say, that without much ado North and South gayly arrived at a final contract of six hearts with South as the Declarer.

A double Dummy inspection of the four hands will show that with a spade Opening there is no play for South to fulfill his contract. West, however, not being a clairvoyant, made his natural Opening of the diamond King. The Ace in Dummy won this trick, and after two rounds of trumps were played South led the Jack of clubs and naturally was greatly disappointed to find that the finesse lost. East, of course, returned a diamond, which South ruffed in his own hand.

At this point the Declarer, by merely tackling the spade suit, could have played the contract safely for down one. However, South saw one ray of hope. If East held four clubs and also the spade King, he could eventually be squeezed. To successfully operate the Squeeze South saw that he first had to employ the Vienna Coup. He therefore led a spade from his own hand and won with the Ace in the Dummy, thereby deliberately setting up the King in East's hand. For a squeeze against the East hand to work, this play was absolutely essential as with the Ace of spades still remaining in Dummy, the Dummy would be squeezed before East.

After cashing the spade Ace South ran all his trumps. Coming down to the last four tricks East could not keep three clubs to prevent all three clubs in Dummy from being good, and the King of spades to stop South from making a trick with the Queen in his own hand. Naturally, East, not knowing for certain who had the spade Queen, chose the one discard which gave him some hope—that is, the spade King. South, of course, now cashed the spade Queen — his own hand and discarded his other spade on the extra high club in Dummy.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note that, in addition to the fact that the use of the Vienna Coup is absolutely necessary to successfully operate a squeeze against the East hand, it would not hurt the operation of a squeeze in the event that the West player held the important cards.

Ford V-8 Safety and Comfort are built-in from the ground up

It takes more than one or two mechanical features to make a motor car ride safely and smoothly. The riding ease and sense of security that lets you relax in a Ford V-8 for mile after mile under all driving conditions is due to a unique combination of many qualities.

Study the features shown above. They show you how safety and comfort have been built into the Ford V-8 from the ground up . . . why this perfectly balanced car holds the road steadily at all speeds . . . why it starts and stops quickly and smoothly . . . how securely it shelters passengers from the hazards of modern driving.

You'll also find the Ford V-8 one of the most comfortable and easy-to-handle cars you ever drove. A 20-foot turning radius makes steering and parking nearly effortless. Double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers cushion the jolts and bumps of rough roads. And the Ford V-8's 112-inch wheelbase gives you "big car" roominess that lets five six-footers ride in uncrowded comfort.

Drive the Ford V-8 and prove these qualities for yourself. And when you do, remember that this low-cost Ford V-8 is the most economical car to operate Ford has ever built!
